PUNCH TO CAVOUR.

"Count Cavour * * * * has retired in disgust from the point politique he has so long filled."—Times, July 14th.

Count O'Cavourseau, the bubble is breaking,
You've lost the last scene, Sufferino's red kit,
The cannons no longer thunder are wheeling,
Count O'Cavourseau, what Minister still?
O last, but not the diplomacy throne
In which thou did'st bear so distinguished a part,
The world is clear out of all the Congress tones,
The vacancy still long—Pawer of my heart.

Cavourseau, Cavourseau, the deal fix in members
Beneath the sun that where the lions sleep thine
In the nest of My Cato the Emperor slumbers,
But Dante's Purgatory continue to bite
Well done, my Cavour, they have cut short the romance
That fired all the palaces of Italy's heart;
And in raising thy back on the Austrian and papal,
Cavour, thou has played a good manly part.

BATHING—ITS USE AND ABUSE.

Now that so many persons are spending the warm season on the sea-shore, and bathing in its waters, the following advice will prove useful. Sea-bathing requires caution to make it useful and health-imparting. Sir Arthur Clarke says:

The manner of bathing, though a point of the first importance, seems by most people to be thought of no consequence at all, but let the effects of bathing be considered and this indifference will appear in a strong light. By the compression of the blood vessels of the surface of the body, which takes place on judicious immersion, the blood is carried off with increased force to the heart, and excited by the reaction with proportional impulse. By this increased action and velocity the capillaries are opened, the sluggish and tenerious humors loosened, and the whole system invigorated; but all this depends upon total and instant immersion.

To suppose that stepping into a bath, or wetting the body by parts, will produce these effects, is an absurdity. Everything beyond a single plunge is preventive of benefit. By continuing in the bath the body is robbed of its natural heat, reaction prevented; the vessels collapse, and transpiration by the natural channel of the pores is suspended; obstructions are confirmed, and paralysis is frequently induced. To leap from a height into the water is injurious. An easy and nearly a horizontal position is the best for the moment of immersion; and the proper time for bathing is when the natural inclination is the strongest; and this, generally speaking, will be after considerable exercise, but short of producing sensible perspiration or fatigue. Nothing can be more injurious than forcing the entire margin of the blood till the stagnating fluids refuse to obey even the spur of immersion. The bath should be used only once a day.

With regard to the exercise of swimming, it should be of moderate duration; when long-continued it has, in numerous instances, occasioned the loss of limbs and not unfrequently proved fatal. Sir Arthur Clarke seems conscious of treading on slippery ground when he advises ladies to dispense with dresses while bathing. Children should never be dipped more than once, and that with the greatest care; let the immersion be deep, and quickly done. The proper depth for bathing is about four feet and a half.

Romance and Sentiment—A Young Girl in Boy's Clothes.

A young man made his appearance in Justice Purdy's office last evening, in company with an officer, whose very fair complexion and generally petite appearance at once attracted attention. He had a pretty face, a world of brown hair, bewitching blue eyes, and such a winning little mouth, with dimples at the corners, that no woman could have resisted falling in love with him on the spot, a circumstance that, to experienced eyes, sharpened with long familiarity with feminine eccentricities, suggested doubts of sexual identity—suspicions that the pretty boy was no boy at all, but only a pretty girl in boy's clothes.

With the doubt came the confirmation in the account of the officer, who stated that he arrested his prisoner at the instance of a boarding house keeper on Randolph street, named Mrs. Murray, who alleged that she was a runaway girl in boy's clothes. She was quite shaken at her detection, and at the inquisitive eyes directed upon her, and, for some time, declined to make any answer to the questions put, except by spiteful little pouts, but she finally regained her temper, and gave an account of herself, with many hesitations and half frightened glances at the listeners gathered around. She said that her name was Minnie Harris, and that she belonged in Canada somewhere near Woodstock, if anybody knows where that is, and that her father was a master mechanic, who had no appreciation of the troubles of young ladies of a romantic disposition.

She had received a tolerable education, the principal element of which was an extensive course of novel reading, from which she had gathered enlarged ideas of the sphere designed for the development of young ladies in the bud. She thought wedding clothes were the last thing for a heroine to engage in—and she thought some of becoming a heroine, and told her father so. He did not appreciate her romantic sentiments, and told her to be bed at sundown for being obstinate and "talking trash," as he styled it. She improved the time between sundown and morning in reading Rinaldo Rinaldini, to the light of a tallow dip. Being thoroughly acquainted with the plot of this intensely interesting work, we are unable to state its substance, but gathered from her narrative that the hero was a young lady of whom Rinaldini was a boy's clothes, climbed over a mountain, rolled up her sleeves to fight a big giant, but succeeded in subduing him with a glance of her mild eye, and then fairly herself across a broad sea, in a dug-out, to a great city, where she had many charming and successful adventures, and finally married the hero.

Minnie awoke in the morning, with her blue eyes suffused with tears at her hard fate, which were not done away by the events of the day, consisting, as they did, of several hours' apprentice to the wash-tub, in compliance with the demands of her parents. Her mind was made up that night to follow in the footsteps of the brave and virtuous Geraldine. No more wash-tub for her—no more drudgery to her romantic visions—no more drudgery to deal the aspirations of her sentimental soul—all should be novel, romantic and success. She would go and teach, school, sell dry goods, embroider fancy work or engage in any other light diversion, until some rich gentleman came and threw himself at her feet, offered to kill all her persecutors, and married her in a halo of happiness.

She went, in the best suit of her younger brother, and arrived in Detroit a couple of weeks ago. Here she found herself alone and friendless among a multitude of strangers, not one of whom cared a straw's value for her welfare, and that so much so that they did not know, and in despair she went to the boarding house and cried her eyes out during the first two or three days, after which she settled down into a listless, resigned state of mind, and made no effort whatever to help herself. The consequence was that sharp eyes soon discovered her secret, and she was speedily hunted down to the place—she knew the way, and that was her story, and all she wanted was to get home. Glad enough she was to hear that she would be sent there by the first train in the morning.—Detroit Free Press.

DESPERATE TIME WITH A BURGLAR.

The Baltimore Patriot of Friday evening furnishes the particulars of an affray, a brief notice of which was telegraphically given:

This morning, between the hours of one and two o'clock, the residence of Mr. Edward Jones, who is engaged in the dairy business, and which is located at the intersection of Northern avenue and York road, was visited by two experienced and daring burglars, who, by means of a chisel or a saw, three of the slats of the kitchen window blinds were taken out, and the spring attached to the window fall wrenched off by a "jimmy," or some other kind of instrument used for such purposes, which gave them access to the various apartments on the first floor.

The examination was first made in the kitchen, from whence they visited the dining-room, and, finding nothing of value to them, proceeded to the front parlor, when observing a chest, and finding the same locked, broke it open, when to their delight they discovered a large shot bag containing $1150 in gold, silver, and bank bills, carefully hid in one corner, which was taken possession of by these night intruders. Not being satisfied with what they had already obtained, a further search was continued, which revealed to their sight an elegant gold lever watch, to which was attached a heavy gold chain, valued in all at $265, together with two of Colt's improved pre-volvers, worth about $40. While making an examination of the contents of the chest, one of the wars fell to the floor, which aroused Mr. Jones from his sleep, when he heard sounds of footsteps ascending the stairway, no doubt for the purpose of committing depredations in other portions of the house. Springing from his bed, he hastened down the stairway in his night clothes, and when about half way a pistol was suspended at him, which fortunately did not explode. As soon as he could gain self-possession he caught his assailant by the throat, when a most desperate conflict ensued, during which blows were struck at his body with a bowie-knife, cutting the right sleeve of his shirt in several places.

As the respective continued to grow more severe, and Mr. J. was getting the advantage of his would-be-murderer, his accomplice, who was hid behind the folding-doors which opened into the parlors, came to his rescue, and placing a pistol to his head was in the act of pulling the trigger, which this gentleman, who, by-the-by, is an athletic man, managed to extricate himself from his grasp, and, seizing a large chair, don't use of the combat a powerful blow over the head, which partly felled him to the floor, and was about closing another one at the head of the other assassin, when a blow from him by a stunning shot knocked Mr. Jones to the floor in a senseless condition, when the thieves ran from the house, leaving behind them a bowie-knife, a cheese knife, and one of Allen's revolvers. There was no man in the house at the time, except one of the laborers employed about the dairy, when he was called to for assistance; but, instead of lending his aid to his employer, whose life was thus in jeopardy, ran away, crying, at the time, "I am afraid!" This morning Mr. Jones appeared at the central station, and stated the above facts together with other information whereby the parties may be known, which we withhold from the public, as it might frustrate the operations of the police, who are using their utmost to find out the pair, and, if possible, to bring them to punishment. Our readers will thus see that these parties do not confine their movements to the city only, but visit the dwellings on the outskirts, hoping to be largely rewarded. This affair taking place on Mr. Jones, who is well known and esteemed as an honest and hardworking man, the earnings, no doubt, of several years having thus been taken from him.

THE STATE SEAL OF OREGON.—The Charleston Mercury thus describes the seal adopted by the State of Oregon:

"The escutcheon is supported by thirty-three stars and divided by an ordinary, with the inscription 'The Union.' In relief, mountains, an elk with branching antlers, a wagon, the Pacific Ocean, on which a British man-of-war is departing and an American steamer arrives. The second quartering with a shovel, plow, and pickaxe. Crest—the American eagle; leg gules—the State of Oregon."

DALY'S
AROMATIC VALLEY WHISKY!
For Medical Use.

HAS now taken that position in the world's estimation, which justifies its Proprietor in claiming for it

A SUPERIORITY UNRIVALED,

Produced, as it is, by a process known only to the manufacturer, and extracted from the choicest grain, which is now so where but in favored locality in the Valley of the Monongahela, and containing no particle of deleterious substance; it has acquired a reputation for perfect purity and intrinsic excellence, based solely upon its inherent merit, which the Proprietor does not intend, so long as he controls the manufacture, shall ever be falsified, or in any manner allowed to impeach the correctness of the statements of the learned and who on certificates we publish herewith.

DISTINGUISHED CHEMISTS

He has heretofore refrained from making public, by advertisement, the

EXTRAORDINARY MEDICINAL PROPERTIES

which this article is known to possess, and this silence on his part has been imposed by a sensitive dread that the slightest suspicion should connect his name with advertising enterprises, and the unknown history of quackeries from circulars. But, for some time past, the proprietor has been in the constant receipt of unsolicited testimonials from all parts of the country, emanating

FROM PHYSICIANS OF THE HIGHEST REPUTATION, and testimonials which speak with such emphatic and unqualified approval of the medicinal qualities of the

AS A

MEDICAL AGENT

in all cases in which a stimulant or diuretic has become requisite—in order to restore, repair or assist the functions and energies of the system, he deems it his duty, to the sick, to publish the facts spoken to make known to the world, a the most public manner possible, those extraordinary and invaluable properties of this article, of his manufacture.

It is not his purpose to enter in detail a list of those diseases of the human system which have been known to be most favorably affected by the use of this stimulant. They are sufficiently described in the certificates and testimonials spoken of, which are open at all times to the inspection of any friends, with who so do not feel at liberty, without special permission of the distinguished persons who have sent them to me, to publish to the public newspapers.

Suffice it to say, that the diseases alluded to comprise all such as are incident to

TROPICAL LATITUDES, TO A CHANGE OF CLIMATE OR DIET, or to any other cause which disorganizes or impairs the special functions of the human system, including lassitude, languor, lassitude and depression, and the multitudinous ills flowing from that source. In all such cases assisting the internal organs, by a stimulation which, both in character and degree, seems to be in all times most admirably fitted to co-ordinate and to aid the functions and energies of the system, in the vital organs as essential to physical health.

THE AROMATIC VALLEY WHISKY ACTS AS A RESTORATIVE,

It is to this extent that the proprietor knows himself to be justified in claiming for his manufacture Hygienic properties of a nature which cannot be overstated nor overrated. Its universal use by the

is most earnestly recommended. Already it has found its way into the principal public and private hospitals in the country, and wherever it has been once used it forthwith becomes a favorite.

I have analyzed a sample of "Daly's Aromatic Valley Whisky," and find it to be a pure article, of fine flavor, and without any deleterious adulterants.
JAMES R. CHILTON, M. D., Chemist, N. Y.

STATE ASSAYER'S OFFICE, 25 Somerset st., Boston, April 17th, 1859.

WM. H. DALY, New York:
I have made a chemical analysis of your Aromatic Valley Whisky, and find it to be a pure, finely flavored Rye Whisky, containing no injurious matters of any kind, and I would recommend it as suitable for medical and public purposes.
CHARLES T. JACKSON,
State Assayer.

WM. H. DALY:
Your Aromatic Valley Whisky is received, and, after careful examination, I find it to be a pure article, entirely free from adulteration (unusually so frequently now). Yours, respectfully,
JAS. F. MAPES, Analytical Chemist.

☞ Customers can depend upon getting a pure article when they buy the Valley Whisky, as it is sold by the barrel and half barrel.
WM. H. DALY,
19 South William st., New York, Sole Proprietor.
