GIRLS IN ITALY.

The idea of a girl in Italy is indissolubly connected with that of a being devoid of all moral sense, infallibly preferring wrong to right, and who can only be kept from harm and evil by the most incessant watchfulness. A mother's whole maternal duties toward her daughter seem considered in Italy to be comprehended in the one act of vigilance. "My daughter has never been, since she was nine years old, for more than twenty minutes at a time out of my sight," said an Italian countess, boastfully; and by this declaration she seemed to think that she merited to take rank in the world's esteem with the mother of the Gracchi. A girl belonging to the upper ranks of life in Italy is practically a prisoner until she marries. Into society she must not enter; neither in the morning fête, or in the evening dance, is she permitted to display her charms and graces. An occasional walk with father, brother, or mother, is permitted; but she must not go outside of the house unless accompanied by her nearest kindred. To be seen alone, even but a few yards from her father's door, would entail upon her the deepest disgrace and heaviest censure. Kept under a perpetual surveillance, every line she writes, and every line she receives, are subjected to rigid scrutiny.

The girl belonging to humbler classes of society shares also, in a great degree, in the same restrictions on her liberty. The grown-up daughter of a woman keeping a lodging house in Florence could not profit by my offer to take her to see the opera of Lucrezia Borgia at the Pitti Palace, solely because she was unable to procure a proper escort to accompany her in the moonlight walk through the best part of the town, to the place where I resided. A working-girl going to be employer's has to provide herself with some companion; and, in emergencies, I have sometimes seen a little child do duty as duenna for the occasion. In the country the same rule prevails; no peasant girl is ever seen alone; and equally in the higher as in the lower classes of society would any infringement of the social code, in this respect, be fatal to matrimonial expectations. Under these circumstances, the proceedings of numerous English ladies excite the wonder and envy of their sex in Italy. Often have I been amused at the way in which the most common-place explanations have been married into heroic actions; and not unfrequently did I find myself elevated to the dignity of a heroine, when utterly unconscious that I had in any way merited the same assigned me.—Miss Crawford.

A SINGULAR DREAM.

We take the following account of a singular dream from the Western Christian Advocate:

Mr. B. had been twice married, but was left a second time a widower, with six daughters and one son. After these bereavements Mr. B. inherited the Gulf of Mexico, and for a time joy the blessing of a wife, and he resolved to exercise all personal convenience and enjoyments of the conjugal relations, and never attempt a second married state. This resolution he sacredly kept for nearly three years, when the arguments and counsel of the minister of the circuit, in the State of Delaware, prevailed on him to change his mind. The consideration of his numerous family of daughters, requiring so much a mother's care and instruction, was one of the leading reasons that had induced him to admit that his resolution might be founded in error. The minister, encouraged by the good impression he had made, and the influence he had gained over Mr. B., took the liberty to name to him a lady residing in a certain neighborhood of his circuit, whom he thought would make him an excellent wife and a good mother for his children, and appointed the time and place for Mr. B. to meet him, and be introduced to her. The second ceremonies took place which prevented Mr. B. from meeting the minister, according to appointment.

The minister, intent upon his plan, procured Mr. B.'s consent to meet him a second time, and the appointment was made; but an unexpected Providence again prevented Mr. B. from being there at the time appointed. He made a third arrangement, and Mr. B. determined, if life and health permitted, he would certainly meet his friend, and be made acquainted with the lady recommended. Before the time arrived, however, Mr. B. was admonished in a dream that the woman so favorably spoken of by the minister was not the one he ought to marry, and he was conducted in a vision to the residence of the young lady that would be a suitable helpmate, and that Providence designed for him. The distance was sixty miles, and he had only traveled twenty miles in that direction. Yet the map of the whole road was laid before his mind, and the way he should go so distinctly marked in the dream, that he seemed perfectly familiar with all the road. He dreamed the distance, the name of the young woman, and the name of her stepfather, Colonel Vickers, the appearance of the house in which he lived, how it was painted; that it was situated near a river, with a wooded brown bear on hand. He dreamed also that there were five young ladies belonging to the same family, and had the one selected for him so accurately described in his dream, that he could easily distinguish her from the other four.

In the morning he awoke and thought nothing of his vision, except as an ordinary and rather remarkable dream. The next night he had precisely the same vision repeated, with the same things presented to his mind in a still more vivid manner. Mr. B. then began to think that there might be some indication of Providence in his dream; and all that day he made it the subject of sincere and fervent prayer that God would direct him in the way he should go in a matter so grave, and involving so much interest to himself and his motherless children. That night he had the vision repeated the third time, and he determined to follow the direction of his dream, and fulfill the circumstances of the dream in a practical examination, and see if the results would be developed as he dreamed them.

He immediately sent word to the preacher, informing him that he had changed his mind, and must decline meeting him at the time appointed. Mr. B. started in the direction indicated by his vision, and after passing the twenty miles he was acquainted with his dream was his only guide. He, however, had no difficulty, for the man of the road was so vividly impressed upon his mind, that he was able to distinguish his road from all others. The gentleman whose name was given to his dream he had never seen or heard of. He knew the farm to be near a village, but knew nothing about it apparent propriety, as they had been presented to his vision.

He alighted from his horse and entered the beautiful house. The personal appearance of the young lady was so vividly impressed on his mind, by the vision thrice repeated, that he readily recognized her in company of the four others whom he found in the same family. He soon ascertained the name of the young woman, and found it to be Sarah T., according to his dream. He's young lady had determined, and had often said, she never would marry a widower. Miss T. and the very moment she first saw Mr. B. she felt a strange tremor pass over her whole system. She had a vivid impression that he was a widower, and that he had come to see her. She afterward confessed that a sudden emotion of affection for him arose in her heart as soon as he came into her presence.

Mr. B. obtained the pleasure of an interview with her that evening, and was successful in securing her consent that he might write. After a courship of a few months they were happily married, and lived together for more than fifty years. Mr. B. died the 20th of March, 1842, and Mrs. B. lived till the 7th of April, 1847. For sixty years, perhaps, they were both distinguished members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Clay Family.

An old letter, written in 1848, by the late Rev. Porter Clay, then preaching at Alton, Ill., gives the following facts in regard to the origin of the Clay family:

Your request to know something about the history of our family could not be gratified within the limits of a letter. The following concise account must suffice. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Sir Walter Raleigh brought over to the Virginia plantations, among others three brothers, sons of John Clay, of Wales, England. He gave them ten thousand acres each, which was a very large fortune at that time. Their names were Charles, Thomas and Henry. They settled on James River, near Jamestown. Two of them, Charles and Thomas, had large families. Henry had no children. The name of Henry has been handed down in both branches of the family with great tenacity even unto this day. Charles M. Clay is a descendant of Charles Clay; Henry and myself from Thomas Clay. Thus the two brothers alluded to are the progenitors of all the Clays in the United States.

My father, as you have heard, was a clergyman of the Baptist denomination. He died in early life, leaving seven children—four sons and three daughters—all of whom lived without children, with the exception of Henry and myself. My mother was married the second time and raised a family of six children; two of them are still living—Nathaniel W. Watkins and Frank Watkins, residing in Missouri. My brother Henry has had eleven children—six daughters and five sons. The daughters are all dead, and one son, H. Clay, jr., who was killed at the battle of Buena Vista—his wife having previously died, leaving three children, who are with their mother's connections in Louisville. Three of my brother's sons are settled near him, in the neighborhood of Lexington. Two of these, Thomas and James B. Clay, are married and have children; the other is a farmer. John, the youngest, whom you saw at Washington, is with his father at Ashland. Theodore, his eldest son, is in the Lunatic Asylum in Lexington, a confirmed lunatic.

AN OPPOSITION CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS DESCRIBED WITH NINE EPITHETS.—Stephen F. J. Trabue, the Know-Nothing candidate for Congress in the Eighth District of Kentucky, after having made a thorough canvass of the district, and ascertaining the opinions and feelings of his friends, he retired in disgust and turned democrat. In a letter to the voters of the district, he says:

This Opposition party I regard as but a faction, having no measures of public policy—no motive of feeling to inspire them other than hate to the Democracy and hope for office—and so I have charged throughout the district—a faction which, if success full, will be powerless for good and only powerful for evil. Regarding the Democratic party as the only true national party of the country, and the only one capable of fighting successfully the many factions of the hour, and of keeping the other three party politically, I believe it to be the duty of all true constitutional national men, and the people of the South especially, in the present and approaching crisis of 1860, to sustain that party. Hence to it my help and support shall accordingly be given. In my canvass throughout the district I have spoken of the Democratic party fully, and which I regard as truly national, involving the best interests of the people of the whole country, as well the natural and affinities as the native born; and when I found there so recently the loudest in their protestations of adherence to American principles on the most willing to wince and kick at the name, I resolved to retire from the canvass, leaving those true men who had determined to support me to act as they may deem best for the good of the country.
