A SPIRITUALIST WEDDING.

At the Convention of Spiritualists held at Plymouth, Massachusetts, on the fifth, sixth and seventh of August, the novel feature of a marriage between two Spiritualists was introduced among the exercises. It is thus described by a newspaper correspondent:

The declarations of sentiments having been put rid of, the next matter in order was the solemnization of marriage between Mr. Nathan C. Lewis and Mrs. Emma A. Babbitt, of Boston. The lady was dressed in loose flowing robes of white, deeply trimmed in blue, and wore blue satin shoes. Two little girls, her daughters by a former marriage, were dressed in exactly the same style, and followed her to the platform. The bridegroom placed himself beside her. He is a physician. Both had been married before, and are each about thirty-five years of age.

Mr. Lowland, who was formerly a Methodist minister, then in a few words appreciate the title of "reverend," addressing the congregation, said:

A theory spiritualists in general do not accept, but are opposed to the regulations that exist legally in regard to the subjugation of women in the marriage relations, still they do generally, if not universally, admit the propriety of making a public acknowledgment of their relations.

Then, turning to the interested parties, he said:

Mr. Lewis and sister, I ask you to make no promise. I impose upon you no obligation. All the things to a you have, you have yourselves assumed by your own mutual vows. I know your hearts. You have all say in your spirits consummated be more as far as it could possibly be. I ask that be a comary you. This congregation are no witnesses of your marriage. But I stand here legally to affirm the fact, and to ask the congregation to join with me in the pronouncing a benediction and blessing on which you have entered, which you have acknowledge, and which you here formally before the world complete. In token, then, of this union, will it you have cemented in your souls, and which you now confess before the world, please join your right hands.

The happy couple complied with the request. Then Mr. Lowland laid a hand on each of their heads, and blessed them in the form:

And now on behalf of this audience, and on behalf of the attending spirits that are around us and with us, I bless this union; I bless you in their behalf, as you start together in this journey of life.

This was the whole ceremony. The bridegroom made a formal bow to the audience. The bride, who had been quietly weeping forward throughout the performance, dropped a curtsey. The pair, with their little attendants to while and like, stepped off the platform, and the audience applauded and hung that it seemed as if they wished the last scene encored.

Mr. Wright was called upon to say something on the subject of marriage and polygamy. He spoke for a few minutes, and ended by presenting to the couple a copy of one of his works, probably "The Unwelcome Child." Shortly afterwards the Chairman was made the medium of handing to the bridegroom a bouquet, which he termed a volume of natural theology. Dr. Lewis accepted the gift and promised to study it. Thus ended the marriage scene.

GET MARRIED.

It is not necessary for us to profess to be enthusiastic admirers of women. Every sensible Big-Ox is. Time or time has little to do with the natural homage which men render to the virtues and charms of the gentler sex. Of one thing, however, this American people of ours can honestly and justly boast. We have put woman in higher and holier places than any people ever accorded her. Whatever of formal politeness or pretentious gallantry may be wanting in our treatment of her, nothing that is true and substantial is omitted. We yield her, for the showy deference of the lip or knee, but the deep and solemn homage of the heart. Especially the wife and mother stands in the richest place and is guarded with a solicitude the tenderness of which has no bounds. This is the secret of all of American life. Casual and unfrequent exceptions, like a dull and leaden back ground, cause the golden characters in which it is written to glitter everywhere upon our national scroll with an added luster. Hence it is that American man and woman look to marriage as the prime reward of a life—no matter whether of poverty or wealth. They look around upon what ever circle they move in; and arguing from what they see, feel that there will be home with them in that state, and a daily address of respect and consequence in the community.

Now, we remember, and investigation by scientific men, throw a bright and happy light upon matrimony, and by their statistical data from other countries pay an unintentional but brilliant compliment to the United States. It is directly shown that our superiority of physical condition, moral power, increase of population, national resources, industrial energy, and general health and longevity, are referable to the high honor in which marriage is held, the general tendency to contract it, and the sense in which it is invested in the United States.

Dr. Farr, of the Register General's Office, London, says in his paper on the subject of marriage in France, that the married live longer than the single or widowed. He considers it from all the statistics, a healthier state. He also truly and justly considers it the only safeguard from moral irregularities, and, in the one a out of ten, sure to protect from those shoals, quicksands, and dark rocks of vice on which he, like Scylla and Charybdis, on either side of the lonely voyager on the ocean of existence.

These facts, the other, being established that man sought a dressed honor by marriage, that they became more useful to their country, that they are by the act insured from vice; that they live longer, and that the sense of dignity and security, almost to a certainty, a greater number of years and fuller health to enjoy a contented life—we say get married. Take the first one behind you who will, take you, O young man, and let the nearest parson be to us is priest by office on you.

WAIT AWHILE.

There are in the world nervous, irritable, impatient fellows who can't bear to wait a day, or hardly an hour, for the reward of their labor—who for a reward without having labored.

"Oh! I never can be happy," says one, "until I develise all the comfortable comforts that they have; because they are not so luxurious, and they make themselves worn-tired, and destroy the peace of their unfortunate lives by their constantly grumbling because they are not rich.

"If I had but ten thousand dollars I should be so happy," exclaim a poor young man.

"Now you would never be happy with riches."

"Why not, I would like to know?" said the youth, eagerly.

"Because," said the gray-bearded man that had replied to him, "because you are not happy as you are."

"Nonsense, sir! I can tell you that circumstances alter cases. How can a fellow that has to work all day, six days out of the seven, penned up in a dark and dirty workshop, in the midst of vulgar and disagreeable companions, and half choked by the foul air of the place, be happy?"

"There young man, in that very speech I see proof of the truth of my assertion. The spirit that makes happiness is not in you; and until it enters your breast you might dwell in palaces, and be miserable. Nothing but you would still be restless, dissatisfied, unhappy—yes, and ungrateful too; for such discontent is wicked ingratitude to Him who is always giving you such bounties to enjoy your leisure. You have pictured to me all the dark side of your present case, but not a word have you uttered of its advantages. Have you not sure and steady employment, under a reasonable and honest master? Have you not a fair degree of health? Have you not kind and true friends, and comfortable home to go to when the day is done?

Are you not young, and is not the world before you, as it was once before your master? With the same industry, integrity, and patience that he exercised, you, in time, may earn all that he has earned. And thus growing up into the abundance of the goods of this life, by means of your own efforts, they will be a thousand times more likely to add to your happiness, than if a sudden shower of them fell upon you now. Blessings scarcely for are more valuable and more lasting than any which come unearned. Riches, to ten thousand young men who without them will grow up to worth and honor, would be ruination. They would become idle and spendthrift, or, worse, proud-proud and intolerably selfish and self-willed. He enjoy that makes them decent and fit to live, or enables their relatives and friends to endure them, is the blessed one. Poverty, poverty lays upon them of hard work and simple fare, till their manhood and their moral sense have be one established. I tell you, boy, whenever and wherever I hear a lusty youngster like yourself groaning because he has not to sweat for it, and cursing poverty and longing to be rich, I know what ails him, and what would be his fate if he could gain his own will; and from my soul I thank God, for that boy's sake, for early poverty, privation, and hard work. They are the Lord's ordained disciplines, humble, and salutary to that young man's soul. Wait, my boy, wait awhile, and see if the words of the old man are not found by you to be true long before your hair becomes as gray as mine.—New York Ledger.

Memphis and Charleston Railroad.

While a great part, our citizens have become familiar with the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, as one of the great on lets for our products, and one which may yet be made of very great advantage to us. It ought to be, in a little while, as much relied upon for the transportation of our bagging, bale rope and provisions, as a market in the interior of Tennessee. Go ye out! be Carolina, as we now look for a market in New Orleans. For most of the intercourse which has already been established, we are indebted to Messrs. W. P. & I. R. S. respectively, who will also, we hope, O young man, and let the nearest parson be to us is priest by office on you.

Miscellaneous.

TO COTTON PLANTERS GENERALLY.

From the Vicksburg Whig.]

THE owners and agents of the various Iron Ties for Cotton Bales, are making great exertions to induce them to your notice, and being there into general use—upon the ground that iron affords greater security from fire, and ease less than rope.

We doubt iron resists fire somewhat longer than rope will; but somehow or other, we invariably affirm are not aware of that fact.—At any rate, they make no difference in their rates of insurance on either. It may be well to state in this head, that iron rust, coming in contact with cotton, in a state of friction, is apt to produce fire; and many persons of intelligence do not exercise the care they should on board cotton-loaded ships to the same extent as they do rope and pitch-bales.

That iron suit the planters less than rope there can be no doubt; and this must be their only reason for using the iron. But that rope is both useful and valuable to the consumer, no one can deny—whereas iron ropes are worth nothing to our body, and this the planters must likely overlook in view of their own more present pecuniary advantage.

There is a community of interests between the planter and consumer that ought to be cared for by each, in order to insure success to both. They should, therefore, deal fairly with one another—both in dealing and this point be their only reason for using the iron rope.

As fact is a statement in figures, to which your attention is respectfully called. It shows an actual difference in cost of 1 per bale in favor of rope to 2 in favor of rope-bagging dollars over that bound in iron.

This great difference certainly warrants the more that is now being made by certain cotton buyers in this city, because the Chamber of Commerce has adopted an resolution to that effect, and approved of the rope-bagging and ties as fair and proper.

Then, turning to the interested parties, he said:

Mr. Iron her and sister, I ask you to make no promise. I impose upon you no obligation. All the things to a you have, you have yourselves assumed by your own mutual vows. I know your hearts. You have all say in your spirits consummated be more as far as it could possibly be. I ask that be a comary you. This congregation are no witnesses of your marriage. But I stand here legally to affirm the fact, and to ask the congregation to join with me in the pronouncing a benediction and blessing on which you have entered, which you have acknowledge, and which you here formally before the world complete. In token, then, of this union, will you have cemented in your souls, and which you now confess before the world, please join your right hands.

TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS REWARD, LOST OR STOLEN.

A PETITION, full to have Seth Ik circulation, and purporting to come from the Cotton Brokers and Factors of Memphis, and addressed to the Chamber of Commerce to establish a uniform tare of twelve pounds per bale on all iron-bound cotton.

Self Petition is believed to be labeled "Cotton Press Interest, by Seth Ik." Its delight search has been made in vain, and no one can be found who has ever seen the document, the above reward will be cheerfully paid to any person who will return the same to the Intelligencer where a TRUE COPY, FROM THE ORIGINAL CAN BE PRODUCED.

CONSUMERS of Richardson's Linens, and those desiring a supply of unsurpassed Linen, should see that the articles they purchase are sealed with the name of Richardson, Sons and Owden, on a crescent of the selvedges and durability of the fabric.
This remark is rendered especially necessary as large quantities of inferior and deceptive imitations are now being offered cheaply and sealed with the name of Richardson, by Irish Houses, who, regardless of the injury thus inflicted upon the Irish Linen Industry and the manufacturers of the genuine goods, will not readily acknowledge the fraud, which the substitution can be imposed on with profit at a worthless character.
