A SOLEMN LYRIC;
OR, HOW PAT SHOT "BADE BIRDS."

Three men and a bull-dog sat
Upon a rock and a barrel (adv.
They'd backed some money on the bird that
And set themselves up for game.
But only I saw the backers
Of that red-headed Paddy's ere,
He's busy? taking "no more for you, sir
Any such game to-day."

"What, James, my boy! keep dark there
And 'n not the big bull-dog (!)
There's a blood-hot crowd, I trade birds,
Jim (aside for a pegg-ntin)"
Chip, hold! speaks the little terrier),
Pup, hound! I mean the old "Queen Anne"—
There's a Paddy scrimmed out in a mob-hole,
A Bilked Scot, hounded out cash.

The Marquis dogs were slink out,
And the low-life's barks begin;
Dr. Paddy threatens of the mob-hole,
And then the "discovers" (?) on a (!);
"Oh, James! I'm prepared to bring suggest,
I know your pluck, James,
For mercy's sake! and skin,
Did you bring the bull-dog? Gold pick!"

"How many fingers? Be hubers!
Did I never put in a one?
I've think I'd be after offering
My pocket to the sun?"
"Well, sure one the problem, James!
Your pocket—is sure as I'm born,
I see it left into my pocket,
As I drew a pound—shame."

A VISIT TO THE REV. JOHN ANGELL JAMES.

[Correspondence of the N. Y. Independent.]

I write from Birmingham. It is, emphatically, a dingy, dusty city, full of business, fifth and Scotch, with little attractive beauty, inside or no architectural beauty; its houses, private and public, being almost universally built of red brick and tiles; smoke, the plaintiff cries. It has colossal manufactures of almost every description, and is styled the "Toy-Shop of England. Of these things, however, I do not propose to write, but simply to mention that Wednesday evening service at Rev. John Angell James' chapel, which I had the opportunity of attending, and an hour's interview which I enjoyed with this venerable servant of God on Thursday morning.

At the service Mr. James read from the Book of Nehemiah these words, "The joy of the Lord is my strength," and immediately commenced his remarks in a strong voice, clear and clear. I was greatly refreshed and encouraged by the sermon. I, it was without doubt, as all the preaching I have heard in England has been, except the Lord Bishop of London.

Mr. James is a man of medium height, English build, rather stout, his white hair, cut short, brushed upward and back; his little skull-cap, but no wig, his eyes, clear, intelligent, of size near forward on his cock, manifests a strong, firm and a lovely discretion. He is seventy-five years of age. I had greatly desired to see and hear this man, and to have the spiritual joy. I was interested by the fervency of evidence, and especially by the delight that I should see and hear him again.

Friends promised him as though they deeply loved him. He has been blessed in being greatly useful in his own congregation and throughout the land. His Sabbath-school views will continue with mankind. His record is on high. In a old age he seems to realize in his own experience the principle of the text—"The joy of the Lord is your strength."

On Tuesday morning at ten o'clock, I called on him. He has a pleasant residence in Hagley Row, one of the fairest portions of Birmingham. After being announced, I waited but a few moments—looking at the pictures of Richard Hill, the Jaynes, Robert Hall, William Jay, and others—before he came down into the parlor. He heard my name, gave me instruction, and immediately began to speak of America and the great revival with which that country had been so recently favored. He asked many questions in respect to it. At length he remarked:

"It is perhaps the most wonderful revival in the life story of the church, in regard to extent and numbers, propriety and instructionality."

I asked him the state of religion in Birmingham and England. He replied:

"It is not ever so—it is not favorable in this respect, either of Birmingham or the country in general. The spirit of prayer is not high, nor what it is wont to be in our churches, and we fear it is not acquainted. Conversions here and elsewhere are unfrequent. Yet there is an evident spiritual improvement just now in preaching and prayer."

I referred to the revival in Ireland. He replied:

"It is a remarkable work. What seems, in the view of the world, to be mainly the physical demonstrations, may be philosophically accounted for, in most cases, by the strength of convulsion, by the truth and reality and powerfully to present to the Holy Spirit upon the conscience. Yet ministers should labor to check these physical manifestations."

I inquired as to the comparative strength of the Evangelical and the Catholic churches in Birmingham. He replied:

"The Catholics have not increased in the ratio of the population. One difficulty which the Evangelical churches have to contend with here, which you have not in America, is an Established Church which will not fraternize with other Protestant churches even in prayer meetings, and does not favor conversions. Yet we hope these churches are doing some good, especially in wide-ranging Roman Catholicism. Presbyterianism does not seem to succeed well in England. It is a noble plant indigenous to Scotland, while Congregationalism, Methodism, Baptism, do not flourish there. Congregationalism in Birmingham is prospering. the Methodists are strong, though not comparatively as crowded as formerly. The Baptists have several strong churches."

I found that in Birmingham there are three Presbyterian churches and thirteen Congregational. Mr. James' church is a strong one. Its membership is between eleven hundred and twelve hundred. Said he:

"We have few conversions. Nearly all the congregation are already church members."

He inquired of Rev. Dr. Sprague of Albany—his health, and the progress of his great work. On my reply, that I had been for two years a student in the Theological Seminary at Albany, he pronounced a eulogy on Prof. Stuart. He asked of Rev. H. W. Beecher and others in New York. He said he took the Independent, and had received a letter from it. Among many other things, he said that Henry Ward Beecher's writings were highly valued by the people of England, especially his "Life Thoughts."

He spoke of the policy of the American Tract Society with deep regret. He thought the British Society should do its own work entirely independently. "There should be no work Rep."

Mr. J. one is a genial lovely spirit—like Barnabas "a good man and full of the Holy Ghost." As I departed, he said, "I Anxious Inquirer," and its acceptability and influence in America, he spoke with much emotion, thanking God. Let us make it a blessing.

We may time had come for going, he asked me to receive a copy of his last book, "Christian Hope," with his autograph. He remarked:

"You will see in the preface my health is showing beyond recovery; may God bless you and prosper you. I am to old man, and must soon sleep with the fathers."

I asked how long he had ministered in Birmingham.

"Fifty four years," he replied. "Fifty-two I have lived in this house. Here I began my ministry, and here it will end."

Many single thoughts crowded my mind at the conclusion of this interview. How differ at the experience of a whole hour from that which I anticipated next—a visit to Sir Fo-do-ne Kettle-ish, for which it is time to start.

Yours, R. B. W.

The Square Trade out West.

The Tribune of Saturday has a letter from Mr. Greeley, who had reached Oregon. We make the following extract:

Fort Kearney, Neb., July 8, 1859.—We crossed Big Sandy to-day before quitting—once just at the station where the above was written, and again eight miles further on. Twelve miles down brought us to Green river, a stream here perhaps as large as the Mohawk at Schenectady, or the Hudson at Waterford. It winds with a very rapid, muddy current, through a deep, shallow valley, much of it sandy and barren, but the residue producing some grass with a few large cottonwoods at intervals, and some worthless timber. There are three rips in it within a short distance, and two or three tread on posts, somewhat frequented by Indians of the South Pass. Eighteen miles farther we halted for dinner, on the Platte, at the junction of Hade's Fork, two large mill streams that rise in the mountains south, one of the other point, and run together into Green river. They have scarcely any timber on their banks, but a sufficiency of it alone—both cottonwood, willow, black cherry and a little ash—now to—with more grass than I have found on the side of the South Pass.

On the stream live several old mountaineers, who have large herds of cattle which they are rapidly increasing by a lucrative traffic with the emigrants, who are compelled to overtake their cattle, and have to pay scores for fresh ones in almost any terms. R. D., whose tale we passed last evening, is said to have six or eight hundred head, and knowing the country perfectly, he is enabled to keep in them through summer and winter, by frequently shifting them from place to place—at a circuit of thirty or forty miles. J. R., who has been here twenty-five years, came with little or nothing, and has quickly accumulated some fifty horses, the rear four hundredfold of near one hundred, and a very number of half-and-half children. He is said to be worth several thousand dollars, though he has not seen a garden, has probably not tasted an apple or a peach these ten years, and lives in a hut which we would be dear at fifty dollars. I incapable the gentleman's way of life not by any means to commend it, but to illustrate the habits of a class.

White men, with two or three squaws each, are quite common throughout this region, and young and relatively a large Indian girls are bought from their fathers by white men as regularly and as openly as Circassians at Constantinople. The usual range of prices is from $40 to $100—whether that of an Indian horse, I hear it stated that though all other trade may be dull, that in young squaws is always brisk on Green river and North Platte. That women so purchased are treated and regarded as chattels, as variety or avarice may suggest, and that they should desert or deserve their purchasers no less than white competitors are prone to do, I have my grounds for the faith. Yours, R. B. W.

Miscellaneous.

TO COTTON PLANTERS GENERALLY.

From the Vicksburg Whig.]

THE owners and agents of the cotton from Tiro to Cotton Bales, are making great exertions to induce them to rent money, and bring them into market—upon the ground that it can afford greater security from fire, and cost less than rips.

No doubt less insurance rate somewhat lower than rips will, and somewhere or other, our insurance offices are for aware of that fact—not any rate. They make no difference in their scale of insurance on either. It may be well to state on this head, that iron rust, combine in contact with cotton, in a state of friction, is apt to produce fire; and many periods of intelligence do really attribute the late fire on Lord Hardinge-bound ships to this cause. It is a well-known fact, however, that treated cotton is more liable to damage by expansion by wetting than rope-bound cotton, and that it is much more expensive to pick and pull to order.

That iron rods the planters have this year there not to be doubt—and this must be their only reason for using the iron. But that rope is both useful and valuable to the cotton, no one can deny—whereas iron hoops are worth nothing to any body, and the planters must likely overlook in view of their own more prominent personal advantages.

There is a community of interests between the planter and merchant that ought to be cared for by each. In order to insure success, each must do his part. The shortly, therefore, deal fairly with the another—it is having therefore and courteously simply, in all concerns with the intervening speculators, who make all the other between them.

At first to a statement in figures, to which your attention is respectfully called. It shows an actual difference in value of $1 per bale, or $20 per annum on the score of rope-bound cotton over that bound in iron.

This great difference ought to induce the more that is now being made by certain cotton figures in this city, to secure the Chamber of Commerce to establish an uniform tare of 20 pounds per bale on all cotton received at this port after this date.

as a guarantee of the soundness and durability of the linen.

This mark is rendered essentially necessary at large from the fact that inferior goods are frequently substituted when asked, and sealed with the name of Richardson, or Irish Linens, who, regardless of the injury done to the reputation of the genuine goods, will not readily compensate the disappointed purchaser, who must be imposed on with goods of a spurious character.
