THE OLDEST CHRISTIAN HYMN.

In Neal. Lib. III of Clement, of Alexandria, is given (in Greek) the most ancient hymn of the primitive Church. It is there (one hundred and fifty years after the Apostles) asserted to be of much earlier origin. It may have been sung by the "beloved disciple" before he wrote his Revelation. The following version will give some imperfect idea of its spirit:

Shepherd of tender youth!
Guiding, in love and truth,
Through devious ways;
Christ, our triumphant king!
We come thy name to sing,
And here our children bring
To shout the praise.

Thou art our holy Lord—
The all-subduing word,
Healing of strife!
Thou Guide through all above,
But from man's deep disease
They children's cure our race,
And give to life!

Thou art wisdom's high priest!
Thou hast prepared the feast
Of holy love;
And in our mortal pain,
Now calls on thee in vain,
Thy blood doth cast disturbt,
Help thou alone.

Bear be thou our guide,
Our shepherd and our pride,
Our chief and king!
Down! thou Christ of God!
Be thy name our word,
Lead in where thou hast trod,
Make our faith strong.

Bolster, and till we die,
Bound on thy golden sky,
And joyful sing:
Infants, and the glad throng,
Who to the Church belong,
Unite and swell the song
To Christ our King.

THE SABBATH.

Sidney Smith pronounced the following sonnet one of the most beautiful in the English language:

When silent now I hail the sacred morn,
That wont to shake while all the fields are still,
A sounding chime on every breeze is borne,
A grave and solemn gladness from the hill,
And echo answers softer from the hill,
And other sounds the livelong day the charm—
The sabbath bell, the sabbath day!
Hail! light serene, Hail! sacred Sabbath morn
The rest thou bring'st to all my sorrows!
Thou art a peaceful pillow (some shower)
Thou art that aspect along the green,
Here kindest their downy wings in sweet repose;
The hovering rack of clouds forgets to move;
So seemed the day when the first morn arose.

THE FAITHFUL SENTINEL.

The following incident, which occurred at Camp Washington during the "Sepoy" war, is too good to be lost:

A certain regiment, which was at one time spoken of as not particularly smart either in drill or discipline, and whose ranks are chiefly filled by natives of the Emerald Isle, was ordered down there to do duty. Many laughed at the idea, believing that it would be an easy matter to roam all over the camp, for the "Greeks" would never molest them.

The very first evening proved the fallacy of such a supposition. One of the most promising leaders of the Sepoys, wishing to visit the camp by moonlight, but not "alone," applied to one of the sentinels, and was refused admittance. A rule to lie tried to melt the sentinel's obdurate heart, it was no use; the man was firm. Mr. M —— then requested that his sister might be sent to the Colonel, with an intimation of his wishes. The corporal of the guard was accordingly dispatched to the commanding officer, who, having heard the message, directed a subordinate officer to escort the gentleman through the camp, and see him outside the inclosure.

For this conduct, complaints were made in the newspapers, the ignorance, rudeness, and ungentlemanly conduct of the "rascally Greeks," were shown up, and the disappointed vented their spleen pretty generally, forgetting that had the Colonel done otherwise he would not be performing his duty, and that the sentinels were upright and honest in obeying the orders of their posts. But a greater trial awaited them

On the following day, a sentinel was posted with strict orders to allow no person whatever in or out of the camp without a pass signed by the Colonel. Scarcely had the man assumed his duty, when a lady appeared, who was no less a personage than the Colonel's wife, and although married to an Irishman, was in every other particular thoroughly anti-Irish, and, if a man, would doubtless be a prominent member of the "know nothing" organization.

"Madam," said the sentinel, who by the way spoke terribly through his nose—"you will pardon me, but—have you a pass?"

"A what, sir?" asked the lady indignantly.

"A pass, madam. You cannot go out without a pass from the Colonel." The sentinel completely barred her way, although his manner was most respectful.

The lady dropped the indignant, and with one of her earnest smiles, said:

"Oh, but surely, my good friend, you will not refuse a lady!"

"Madam," answered he, "I wish to the Lord I was in any other capacity, and anything that politeness or gallantry required should be done, but as I am now soldiering, obedience is my first duty. If it was my sister or my sweetheart, bedad she should have to go back."

"But you Irish gentlemen are famed for gallantry—how! don't you think you could strain a point in behalf of a lady, and let me pass?"

"Madam, my heart is as soft and tender toward your sex as any man that ever was born on the world and, but were it to gain me an estate, and that you were even the Governor's lady, my orders are imperative, and I could not let you pass."

"Well, it comes to a pretty pass, indeed," pull the lady, with the slightest possible pout, "when an American lady is denied her liberty by an Irishman."

"I wish to the Lord, ma'am!" answered the sentinel, "you were on the other side, but as it cannot be, just take a seat (and he pushed a log of wood toward her,) and be patient until the 'corporal' comes, an' he'll get leave from the Colonel for you to get outside."

"No, sir," replied she, now getting vexed, "I will go to the other gate, and believe me, you will be sorry for this."

"Well, ma'am, you needn't trouble yourself; you had as well stay where you are, for if the sentinel on the other gate is the man I take him to be, bedad you will stand a far worse chance with him than you do with me."

"Well," said she, "you are pretty soldiers to insult a lady thus."

"Madam, as I said before, I wish to heaven you were outside. Every now I am transgressing my orders by conversing with you while on my post, but you appear to be an intelligent woman, and surely you ought to know the difference between a sentinel and a soldier."

"I do not, sir. Pray enlighten me."

"Well, ma'am, a soldier is gallantry itself. The true soldier will rather think insult a lady, even if she be numbered among his enemies; and an Irish soldier, although you despise us—would go through fire and water before he would offer a lady a slight. Mind! I was the white of her eye.' You know the old song says:

'Pulteenee an Irishman's trade is.'

And, next to war, gallantry is a soldier's trade. But obedience is his first duty—gallantry is his second. Were I not on duty, I would gate my neck in the fixer to serve you; but a sentinel is a different thing—he knows nobody; has neither eyes for beauty, nor ears for the voice of the gentle; he must be stern and unyielding, even to the fair sex. If I dared—so beautiful a lady (here the lady smiled) should not ask me twice—but as a sentinel, ma'am, I tell you, that you must go back or be put to grass the moon, as to make me swerve from my duty. Sit down now, ma'am; I have nothing more to say."

The lady was now thoroughly aroused. "Now, sir," said she, "you'll suffer for this; I'll go at once and report you to the Colonel; I am," and she gave a look, that, if her eyes were thunderbolts, would annihilate him, "I, sir, am your Colonel's wife!"

"You are, are you?" he replied quite coolly, "bedad, then, whatever chance you had before, now you have none at all at all; I know the Colonel too well, and fair I'm sorry I spoke to you—but, faith, ma'am, for if you gave me all the gold in California you should not pass here. I know that gentleman too well, and faith, if you went out here, it's a lover marched off I have."

At this moment General ——, who had visited the camp in citizen's dress, and had been previously refused admittance by the same sentinel, came up in company with the officer of the guard, and was passed out by name.

"General," said the lady, "this Greek here has insulted me."

"How, madam?"

"He has refused to let me pass."

"Madam, he has done his duty as a good soldier, and your husband will thank him for it. He refused myself." Then turning to the sentry the General directed him to let the lady out, saying that he would hold him blameless. The sentinel saluted, and the lady said, as she passed out, "now I am on the other side, and no thanks to you!"

"I wish to the Lord you were there an hour ago, ma'am," was the response, "and another time, I trust you will remember the difference between a sentinel and a soldier."

Some months after the above scene took place, the individual in question, laboring under a deep-rooted lung disease, sought the quarters of his Colonel. He was received kindly, and even the lady, who now had learned her error, was particularly courteous. He came to say that he was suffering from consumption, and that he was going to the country for the benefit of his health. He knew he would die, he said, but he hoped the Colonel would see that he was buried with military honors—if such a thing could be asked. There was a trifle coming to him, too, and he wished the Colonel to dispose of it.

The colonel rallied him, and the lady, with one of her sweetest smiles, bade him good bye, and cheer; "such a good sentinel," said she, archly, "should not allow himself to be a bad soldier by thus despairing."

At this time the regiment had orders to provide themselves with new uniforms, and the Colonel, after encouraging the man, and trying to laugh him out of his presentiment, told him he need not provide himself with the new uniform until he returned.

"Colonel," said he, "I have got it."

"What, what nonsense that was," said the Colonel. "If you thought you were going to die."

"I wish to be buried in it," he replied, "but oh! Colonel, a gra gal machroidi, (dear pulse of my heart) promise me, sulhere, that the old corps will follow me to the grave," and the tears stood in his eyes.

"I promise," said the Colonel, "that if only myself is left of the reg ment, I will follow you to the grave, if you die before me."

"And I," said the lady, deeply moved, "will go also."

"May God bless you," said the poor fellow, and the tears fell like rain, "God eternally bless you and your friend!" One thing more, "there is about fifteen dollars coming to me for my services on Staten Island, where I caught my death. Take it, Colonel jewel, an' if you find a poor man who wants it, give it to him as my legacy." Then turning to the Colonel's wife, he wished her good bye; she extended her hand, he kissed it respectfully, and, as the warm tear dropped on it, he bade "God bless her."

"And you, too, my poor fellow," she replied, "I at least will never forget the man who taught me the difference between a sentinel and a soldier."

Col. Kinney, the great Central American colonist and filibuster, having returned to Texas, has just been elected to the Legislature of that State, from Nueces county.

NOTICE
TO LEVEE CONTRACTORS.
WILL receive from this date up to the 7th of September, next, sealed proposals for the construction of what is known as the "Tower Point" or "Dorris's Neck" Levee. This work lies in Chickasaw county, Miss., seven miles north of Hebron. Its length is about 3000 feet, and embraces some of the most difficult construction of any levee of such work. Bond will be required for the completion of the work by the 1st day of January next—guaranteeing against contractors, and the Mississippi river up to the 15th of December previous. Those who propose for the work have standing timber and the ownership of the persons offered as security.
The proposals for the above work will be made in cash, upon monthly estimates—reserving one-fifth—until the completion of the work, when the balance (two-fifths of the balance will be paid in cash, and the balance in a certificate of the 1st of April, 1860, shall be received) the remaining fourth will be paid. Bids will be received at the Levee District office in Delta, Miss., with right per cent. per annum interest on the balance.
The bids will be opened at the place of the proposed work, on Friday, the 23d day of September, at the hour of 12 o'clock, M. The right is reserved to reject any or all bids.
I shall offer at the same time a bath contract, to plant from four to six hundred feet of the ground in the levee, by the year five years.
The Chief Engineer, MINOR MERRIWETHER, will be on the ground on Monday and Tuesday previous to the day of letting, and will place in bidder the particulars, show ground, profile, etc. Information, in the meantime, can be had by addressing him in Pontotoc, Miss.
