THE LATE FROST.

From the St. Louis Republican, September 3, 1859.—We [illegible] La Crosse, Wis., Septe[illegible] last two nights, have had severe frosts for the [illegible] quarter and the weather so cold as form to [illegible] owing of an inch in thickness. The entire [illegible] crop of corn is destroyed. Respectfully, [illegible] N. H.

P. S.—Farmers refuse to sell their oats at any price, since the destruction of the corn has been ascertained. This is a place from whence thousands of bushels of oats go daily to St. Louis. N. H.

Correspondence of the Chicago Press and Tribune.

CLINTON, Wis., September 2, 1859.—The frost last night has done its work thoroughly in this vicinity—potatoes and all vines are cut to the ground. Corn is very much injured, although some of the farmers think not enough to prevent its maturing; aside from the injury by frost the corn crop promises well, although it has been exceedingly dry for two months. Wheat on this prairie (Jefferson) is exceedingly good in quality and yields well; probably no better crop was ever taken off than this year. The threshing is nearly done and quite a quantity of wheat being sold; people seem disposed to sell their grain and pay off old debts. One farmer tells me he prefers 60c. for wheat to paying 12 per cent. on money until spring, and run the risk of higher price. One prevalent practice here I wish some of your correspondents to condemn as it deserves; I refer to burning straw. Farmers, with a short crop of hay, and corn fodder damaged by frost, you must quit it; your land needs every straw to be returned as a fertilizer. Do not consider your soil inexhaustible. Yours, RESIDENT.

ANOTHER FROST.—Some portions of this State were visited again last night by a scorching frost, cutting down in some localities, the garden vegetables that had escaped the severe frost of the 5th of June, and such as have been planted since. Some fields of corn on low ground, where frost is uniformly the most severe, will no doubt be nearly ruined, as it is now scarcely out of the milk. Other fields on high ground have probably escaped so far, but we have no doubt that the visits of Jack Frost will be repeated until the corn crop is greatly damaged. The promise of the corn crop was quite enough in all conscience before the frost of last night, but is still worse now. As for potatoes, the severe drouth has so checked their growth that nothing but a good soaking rain and the absence of frost for some weeks, will make them even a tolerable crop. And as there is little reason to hope that the rain will fall or the frost will hold off, we cannot see but that the crop must be a signal failure.—Milwaukee Democrat.

FROST AND ICE.—Thursday night the heavens were again blackened by the brilliancy of the northern light. The clouds rolled and tumbled like a troubled sea, presenting a most gorgeous appearance. The air was keen and chilly—ice having formed in some places, the sixteenth of an inch thick. Vines of different kinds suffered severely, and the leaves of corn were frosted stiff. We do not think corn will be materially injured unless we should have a continuance of the same cold nights, in which case it will be impossible to calculate the injury that may accrue.—Davenport (Iowa) Gazette.

The Janesville Gazette says: A severe freeze on Sunday night at Berlin has cut off the last hope of any considerable amount of good corn in that region. This, also, with the continued drouth has settled the potato question. Grass on all the uplands is dead, says a Berlin paper, and the cows, as a consequence, have pretty much dried up.

The Ripon Press writes that a severe frost on Friday night, cut off the last hope for corn and buckwheat crops in that region. It also states that fires have raged extensively during the past week, on the marshes in Green Lake and Marquette counties, and that hundreds of stacks of hay have been burned.

The Barraboo Republic says: Last Monday morning a black frost fell in this vicinity, and the cold was so intense as to freeze water to the thickness of nearly one-quarter of an inch. This is the third time within seven years that frost has fallen on the 29th day of August, says our informant, who has noted them down at the time of their occurrence.

The Galena Advertiser of September 6, says: The frost of Friday morning, we hear, cut the corn badly in this neighborhood. Another severe frost occurred Sunday night. How much the crops have suffered we are unable to say.

A New York Merchant in Pursuit of his Wife and her Lover, HIS FRIENDS ARE AND FOLLOWERS ARE.

A Detroit Detective a few nights since received a dispatch from Mr. D. S. Hawkins, of New York, requesting him to arrest his wife, who had eloped with a lover, and who were then on the opposite train. The Free Press relates the result, the husband following the guilty parties on the second train:

He was a man of very gentlemanly appearance and manners, and stated that he was a merchant, and a partner of a fine property and ample income. They lived a few miles above the city, on the North river, where an elegant residence and all the luxuries of life contributed to make a happy home. His wife was beautiful and accomplished, and, after five years of wedded life, he believed himself the possessor of all her affections, and in return lavished upon her the wealth of an undivided heart and a well filled purse. She was indeed faithful so far as outward observance was concerned, but in her heart had conceived a violent passion, or rather allowed hers all to be over-powered into an attachment for a young man in her husband's employment.

The partner of her infidelity was a clerk who had always enjoyed the confidence of Mr. Hawkins—a handsome, dashing fellow, who, in the exercise of full liberty to act as chaperon to his fair lady at numerous hops, boat rides, picnics, and moonlight rambles on the romantic banks overhanging the Hudson, had fallen in love, and by his winning ways and seductive pleading, so far prevailed over the intelligent and usual sound good sense of the lady as to blind her to the nature of the offense and the almost certain consequences. The result was an attachment which rendered the every-day sound and much loved home irksome and unpleasing. The charm was gone when chastity once departed, and an unsatisfied spirit caused her to COAX, wish, and finally reckless feeling, the absence of all familiar objects. They desired to be alone with each other.

The husband, overwhelmed with the denouement so little expected and so slightly deserved, found means to trace them directly to this city. They ran away like children, caring for nothing but to place distance between them and home, and consequently were as easily traced, for detectives in the present day are as sharp as bloodhounds on the track. Having told his story he was informed that the means of recovering his wife lay within immediate reach, and having acquired his resolution to proceed, the officer sent for the conveyance above alluded to, and directed the driver to find the place to which he had taken the lady and her lover. The scene of the unwilling Jehu were sharpened by a gold eagle from the injured husband, and in a short time he drew up in front of a fine brick house on Congress street, which had the modest sign of "Boarding" on the front, and the name of Mrs. Martin on the door.

A lusty rap brought the girl to the door, which was no sooner opened than the husband pushed in, and demanded to see the lady boarder. He was told that she was up stairs. The noise of entrance and talking alarmed the lady, for they had struck the right lead, and as he sprang up stairs, she confronted him at the top, her face actuated by fear and dismay. There was a scene, as there always is, the lady fainting, dying away into insensibility, and awakening again to a terrible reality, amid tears and protestations. The husband stood with folded arms, regarding her intently and with not few words, until the paroxysm passed, and then quietly requested her to prepare for another journey. She was compelled speedily to leave her refuge and return homeward, which she did without a last word with her lover, who, perhaps fortunately for himself, was absent from the house, and did not meet the husband whom he had wronged. The latter seemed determined to gain a Sickles notoriety, and made no effort to find him—taking, perhaps, the wiser course of the two. They went home last night.

CHEROKEE NATION.—The Fort Smith Times says the debt of the Cherokee Nation is very large, and is increasing every year. An intelligent Cherokee informed us, a few days ago, that the annuity of this year, paid by the general government, amounting to nearly $70,000, will not be sufficient to pay the current expenses of the Nation this year. The public debt of the Nation, we believe, amounts to upwards of $150,000. This goes to show that they are incapable of self-government, and that the best thing Congress can do is to bring them under the white laws. That is, make the Indian nations on this frontier, Territories or States.

☞ The New York Courier says a returned Californian reached home a week or two ago, with between $15,000 and $16,000 in gold coin. Feeling it unsafe to keep so much money about him, and suspicious of the honesty of banking institutions, he determined to bury it, which he accordingly did, without informing any one of locality. A few days afterwards he went out alone, when he was thrown from his horse and instantly killed. Of course no one knows where the money is, although it has been searched for very carefully.
