COSTS OF LIVING IN PARIS.

It is generally supposed here that living in the city of Paris, with her grand institutions of learning and arts, amid the splendor and pageant of Imperialism, is a very expensive luxury. This notion a Paris correspondent of the New York Herald, having received a letter from a friend in America, asking for information as to the cost of living in the French capital, contradicts by giving the results of his experience. "Soon after receiving my friend's letter," he says, "I left the Grand Hotel, where I was paying six francs a day for my room, and went across the Seine, among the students, where I engaged a very respectably sized and furnished room for thirty francs a month. To be sure, it was on the fourth floor; but then, that gave me the benefit of the air after I got to it, and the exercise in going to it. In the street just below my house was a neat little 'crameerii,' where you get the universal Paris breakfast, a large cup of coffee, with rich hot milk and a roll, for the reasonable sum of five sous. This establishment secured my undivided custom for several days' breakfasts. For the second breakfast, the 'déjeuner à la fourchette,' I patronized a traiteur, just beyond."

A traiteur, the correspondent explains to us, is an individual who keeps a cookshop, and who will allow his customers to sele t from his stock of chops and steaks what suits them best, and cook it before their faces if they wish it. "For seven sous he will furnish you with a nice chop, and another sou laid out at the baker's, provides you with a roll and consider your breakfast, which you can transport to your room and eat. If you are fond of the juice of the grape, a very respectable article of Burgundy or Bordeaux may be had at a neighboring wine merchant's for from sixty centimes to one franc the litre (from forty-eight cents to a dollar a gallon) and a glass of which, added to the chop and bread, makes a sumptuous breakfast."

After these two meals the next question being where he should dine, our correspondent accepting a card presented to him, which announced a restaurant, went in search of that establishment. His description of the dinner he got there, is as follows: "Dinner at sixteen sous—a soup, a plate of meat, a plate of vegetables, a dessert. These are the cheapest meals. For seven sous more one may have two plates of meat instead of one, and a double quantity of wine. The dishes are very nicely served; a snow-white napkin is furnished every day, and everything appears to be neat and clean." The expenses of the entire day, including rent of the room, are summed up, with some interesting remarks: "Francs, francs; breakfast, 5; lunch, 7; dinner, 10; making a total of 47 sous, or a little less in federal currency than that number of cents. But many persons live here at a much less rate than that. I do not, of course, refer to the laboring people—men and women who live on half of it—but to clerks, students, artists, men about town, and the like. It is not considered disgraceful here to be economical, and I have often seen very gentlemanly men coming out of a baker's shop in the morning with a small roll in their hands which could cost not more than a sou, and they passed along the street. A very distinguished professor in theology of Sorbonne was pointed out to me, a few days since, who lives on this economical combination of locomotion and mastication. I know a student whose entire expenses here for the last year have been but two hundred dollars, and he is enjoying the advantages of the thorough course of medical duty which may be obtained here, and which will yet make him one of the brightest ornaments of his profession."

"Rooms may be hired in the vicinity of the Luxembourg for twenty francs and of thirty francs a month, and a man might get along—and many do—with two instead of three meals a day, and so the cost of living might be made cheaper still."

The information communicated in these extracts is not only interesting, but highly useful also. Besides the wealthy and rich of this country who travel for pleasure and fashion's sake, there are many who desire to visit the capitals of Europe as students of the learned professions or the higher arts. As a great number of these are not living but wealthy, and as the fear of their means not being sufficient to defray the expenses of a protracted residence abroad might deter many from executing so noble an intention as that of gathering useful knowledge in foreign academies and universities, the results of the investigations of the Herald's correspondent, are a welcome addition to our stock of knowledge of European institutions, which cannot fail to encourage many a poor student, anl to bear excellent fruits. It is to be regretted that the foreign correspondents of American newspapers do not, more generally, turn their attention to such, or other similar matters of practical import, instead of filling entire columns with mere political conjectures, the inventions of their own brains, or empty fashionable gossip.

But there are many other thoughts suggested by the conclusions from the correspondence referred to, of no less consequence. That article of luxury and fashion should be cheaper in Europe than America, requires no explanation, but how is it, it may well be asked that in the opulent Imperial City of Paris, with her immense population, her numerous fine and extensive parks, her grand public libraries, art academies, galleries of paintings and museums of every description, all of which institutions cost large sums of money annually, even the necessities of life, rent, fuel, bread, meat, breakfast, dinner and supper, should be cheap r than in the cities of the United States, a country which boasts of its unparalleled natural advantages for agriculture and industry?

We must seek for the causes in the greater efficiency of industry, the greater cheapness of capital which may be obtained in France for one-third of what it costs here, in the habits of thrift and frugality of the French people. A house can be built cheaper in Paris than here, because the materials are cheaper, and service is less, and the products of any business carried on in it are cheaper.

The citizens of Paris pays less than one-half of the city taxes we pay here, yet his city affairs are better managed than ours. The number of loafers living without working on the industry of the land is growing enormously with us, and this is another reason of high prices. Where all are industrious, the production of the necessaries of life is great, and prices are consequently low. High prices denote scarcity, but they are not evidences of the wealth of a country, as is shown by the condition of Mexico and other central and South American republics, where living is extraordinarily high.—Pennsylvanian.

CHANCERY SALE OF VALUABLE LANDS AND TOWN LOTS, IN FORT PICKERING.

PURSUANT to a decree of the Chancery Court at Memphis, rendered May Term, 1859, in the case of Harold Ballard and others, vs. The Memphis and Ohio Railroad Company, Thomas Allen, Master, Receiver, administrator of Michael Leonard, deceased, vs. The Leonard Heirs, Thomas Allen, Master, and others, and Peter Leonard vs. The LaGrange and Memphis Railroad Company and others, I will on Thursday, October 27th, 1859,

On the premises in the town of Fort Pickering, proceed to sell to the highest bidder, the

VALUABLE TRACT OF LAND,

Upon which the town of Fort Pickering is situated, containing about

Two Hundred and Eight Acres,

(except such portion thereof as has been sold and conveyed by the Memphis and LaGrange Railroad Company, from the 8th of October, 1857.) Said tract of Land is bounded as follows, to-wit: Beginning on the bank of the Mississippi river at the south-west corner of John Overton's 100 acre tract, running thence south-westwardly with the meander of the Mississippi river 120 poles to the north-east corner of a 500 acre tract, allotted to Abner Pillow; thence east with the north boundary line of said 500 acre tract, 264 poles to the center of Bayou Gayoso, thence down with the meanders of said Bayou Gayoso to a point near where the south boundary line of said 100 acre tract crosses the center of said Bayou, thence west with the said boundary line about 80 poles to the beginning.

The whole of said tract of land has been laid off and subdivided into streets and lots of various sizes, with all necessary streets and alleys, and will be sold in parcels to suit purchasers, as surveyed and laid down on the plan of the town of Fort Pickering. (See Baker's new map of the city of Memphis and Fort Pickering.)
