Apotheosis of Old Brown.

From the New York Herald.

The law of the land—or, if that phrase be objected to, the law of the sovereign State of Virginia—as everybody knows—has just put the brand of traitor and murderer upon the leader of the recent outbreak at Harper's Ferry.

Last evening, Rev. Mr. Beecher's Plymouth Church, over in Brooklyn, was crowded almost to suffocation, to hear this Virginia-declared traitor and murderer eulogized—nay, deified—as the man of God for the times; while, at the same time, the memory of Washington was insulted by having his name associated with that of the Abolition convict. The vulgar wit the notorious Wendel Phillips—the same person who declared, the other day, before a public meeting in Boston, that the man who would knock off the head of Daniel Webster's statue, in front of the State House, would rank himself immortal.

Hon. Thomas Corwin, of Ohio, was on the platform, listening to all this, and thus lending the prestige of his presence to this Phillips-Beecher apotheosis of old Brown.

People wonder why the South should be so nervous and so morbidly sensitive over such occurrences as that of Harper's Ferry; but why wonder at it, when such frantic Abolitionists as this man Phillips are thus welcomed, and fondled, and encouraged? Had Mr. Corwin no word of protest, as he sat on that platform and heard such sentiments as these rung in his ears—often in the midst (the reporters say) of the loudest applause?

* * * * * * *

"The lesson of the hour is insurrection."

* * * * * * *

"If mutual war is to be used in fetters, it would be right to use it through the medium of Sharpe's rifles." [Applause.]

* * * * * * *

"Connecticut has sent many schoolmasters to the other thirty States, but not one had written in his copy-book a brighter example than old Brown."

* * * * * * *

"Virginia was a pirate, while old Brown was a Lord High Admiral, with letters of marque from the Almighty, to cruise over God's ocean of the universe in entirety."

* * * * * * *

"Washington had made the banks of the Potomac renowned, but Brown had gilded them, and it would take the names of two Washingtons to wash away the infamy there impressed." [Applause and hisses.]

Death of Robert Stephenson, the Eminent Engineer.

From the London Times, October 12.]

The death of Stephenson comes with startling rapidity upon that of Brunel. Both men of rare genius, and both occupying a sort of double throne at the head of their profession, the have gone to their rest together, and their rivalry has ceased. Distinguished sons and distinguished fathers, the two men who have done the most to perfect the art of travel, and in this way to cultivate social intercourse, multiply wealth and advance civilization, have been struck down at one fell swoop in all the maturity of their power. Mr. Stephenson's health had been delicate for some time past, and he complained of failing strength just before his last visit to Norway. In Norway he became very unwell; his liver was so much affected that he hurried home, and when he arrived at Lowestoft, he was so weak that he had to be carried from his yacht to the railway, and thence to his residence in Gloucester Square, where he lingered on for a fortnight or so to leave from the first but faint hopes of his recovery. He had not strength enough to resist the disease, and he gradually sank until at length he expired yesterday morning. If his loss will be felt severely in his profession, it will still be more poignantly felt in his large circle of friends and acquaintances, for he was as good as he was great, and the man was even more to be admired than the engineer. His benevolence was unbounded, and every year he expended thousands in deeds of charity.

His chief care in this way was for the children of old friends who had been kind to him in early life, sending them to the best schools, and providing for them when they came of age generously. His own pupils regarded him with a sort of worship, and the number of men he honored to the Stephenson school who have taken a very high rank in their peculiar walk show how successful he was, in his system of training, and how strong was the force of his example. The feeling of his friends and associates was not less warm. A man of the soundest judgment and the strictest probity, with a noble heart and most genial manner, he won the confidence and all who knew him, and perhaps in all London there was not more pleasant social gatherings than those which were to be found at his house in Gloucester Square, he himself being the life of the party. Without a spark of professional jealousy in his own nature, he was liked by all of his fellow-engineers, if they did not know him sufficiently to bear him affection; and we do not believe that even those who had the most reason to wish him out of the way, such as the promoters of the Suez Canal, which he strenuously opposed, ever bore him any ill will. He has passed away, if not very full of years, yet ever full of honors—the creator of public works, a benefactor of his race, the idol of his friends.

The Light of a Cheerful Face.

There is no greater every-day virtue than cheerfulness. This quality in man among men is like sunshine to the day, or gentle renewing moisture to parched herbs. The light of a cheerful face diffuses itself and communicates the happy spirit that inspires it. The nourest tinges most sweetly in the atmosphere of continuous good humor. As well might fog, and cloud, and vapor, hope to sting to the sun illumined landscape, as the blues and morosenes to combat jovial speech and exhilarating laughter. Be cheerful always. There is no path but will be easier traveled, no load but will be lighter, no shadow on heart or brain but will lift sooner in presence of a determined cheerfulness. It may at times seem difficult for the happiest tempered to keep the countenance of peace and content; but the difficulty will vanish when we truly consider that sullen gloom and passionate despair do nothing but multiply thorns and thicken sorrows. Ill comes to us as providentially as good, and if we do not rightly apply its lessons; why not then cheerfully accept the ill, and thus blunt its apparent sting? Cheerfulness ought to be the fruit of philosophy and of Christianity. What is gained by peevishness and fretfulness—by perverse sadness and sullenness? If we are ill, let us be cheerful by the trust that we shall soon be in health; if misfortunes befall us, let us be cheered by hopeful visions of better fortune; if death robs us of the dear ones, let us be cheered by the thought that they are only gone before to the blissful bowers where we shall all meet, to part no more forever. Cultivate cheerfulness, if only for personal profit. You will do and bear every duty and burden better by being cheerful. It will be your counselor in solitude, your passport and commendatory in society. You will be more sought after, more trusted and esteemed for your steady cheerfulness. The bad, the vicious may be boisterously gay, and vulgarly humorous, but seldom or never truly cheerful. Genuine cheerfulness is an almost certain index of a happy mind and a pure good heart.

Land for Sale.

Trust Sale.

BY virtue of a certain deed of trust executed to me on the first day of March, 1856, by Jas. F. Ballard to secure the payment of a certain bond therein specified, I will proceed to sell for cash, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, the 26th of November, at 10 o'clock a. m., in front of the office of J. Hume, Esq., in the city of Memphis, the following property, viz: A certain lot or ground in the city of Memphis and State of Tennessee, beginning at a point on the south side of Poplar street, at a point 50 feet eastward from the point where the east line of the Avenue lot extended would intersect Poplar street; thence southward parallel with the said Avenue about 185 feet to the center of a contemplated alley; thence eastwardly on a line with the half alley parallel with Hernando street 50 feet; thence northwardly at right angles with said alley and Poplar street about 185 feet to Poplar street; thence westwardly with said Poplar street to the beginning, being part of lot of D. Dunlap's subdivision of original country lot No. 201. The title is believed to be good, but I sell only as trustee. Should the above property not sell for enough to satisfy said bond I will sell at the same time and place, for cash, the shares of the stock of the Memphis Building and Loan Association, conveyed as collateral security.

NEW DRESS-MAKING ESTABLISHMENT,

To the Ladies of Memphis and Vicinity.

THE subscriber in informing the Ladies of Memphis, for the very liberal patronage they extended to her during the past year, begs to inform them that she has leave to state, that she will be able to give most ample satisfaction in the

DRESS-MAKING LINE.

Having succeeded in securing the services of

Madame Morel,

The French Dress-Maker, late of the firm of Tarlee, 497 Broadway, New York, the Fashion Establishment referred to, who will be with her in the action, and who will have charge of my Dress-Making Department. He does not hesitate to say to the Ladies of Memphis and Vicinity, the very name of Madame Morel, will be a sufficient guarantee that her work will be satisfactory. She will be given to them in Dress-Making and fitting.

Ladies please call and see specimens of the work.

N.B.—Mad. Morel will undertake in Dressmaking and Fitting.
