THE MEMPHIS DAILY APPEAL.

ARE THEY NOT IMPLICATED?

From the Baltimore Exchange.

It is hard to reconcile the unmistakable indications of a deep-seated and wide-spread sympathy on the part of the people of the North with old Brown and his mad attempt to incite the Virginia slaves to insurrection and murder, with the earnest protestations of the Republican press and leaders that they are not responsible for his crime, and utterly abhor and repudiate it. Previous knowledge on the part of any considerable portion of the northern people of what was in contemplation by Brown and his associates, of course there could not have been. A few obscure politicians and big-headed fanatics may have been in the secret, but of the existence of any extensive conspiracy we do not perceive the smallest evidence, nor do we believe that such could have existed in fact. But the complicity of the Republican party with old Brown's treason is not the less significant on that account. Apart from the fact that his crime was the direct and logical consequence of the ideas on the subject of southern slavery, and the duty of northern men with reference thereto, which the Republican press and orators have so sedulously labored to inculcate, and which the Republican masses generally entertain—we have seen, in the brazen, open, and, we fear, proofs of their sympathy with the criminal. We have reports of sermons in churches and speeches at public meetings, in which old Brown is held up before admiring audiences in the light of a hero and martyr. His personal character is made the subject of extravagant eulogy. He is compared to Washington—to Moses—to Christ. The history of his bad and disreputable life is rehearsed and invested with a halo of glory and romance, which is obviously intended to allure others to a similar career. Every circumstance of his capture and trial is seized upon and perverted so as to serve the purpose of magnifying his sufferings, and vilifying his capors and judges. The wounds on his body are counted, and the idea studiously put forward that, like the savages, the Virginians amused themselves with torturing their prisoner when he was powerless in their hands. The proceedings of the court which tried him are charged to have been characterized by unusual and indecent haste, and the learned and humane judge, who presided on the occasion, is declared to be worse than a second Jeffries, who—we are assured—would never have passed sentence on a man who could not sit up in his bed. One orator, (Wendell Phillips) has not scrupled to tell us, that when the news of Brown's capture reached Boston, there was but one sentiment in the community—that of universal regret—that men walked the street sadly, as though they had lost a friend, and that the exclamation was on the lips of every second person you met—"What a pity he did not succeed!"

A correspondent of the New York Tribune declares, that if the people of the United States permit Old Brown to be hung on the 2d of December next, they need no longer delude themselves with the idea that they would not have suffered their Savior to be crucified 1800 years ago. All this is very horrible and very blasphemous. We do not allude to it for the sake of widening the breach which already exists between the North and the South, or for the purpose of adding fuel to the flame which already burns all too fiercely for the peace and security of the Union. It is necessary for us, however, to know our friends from our foes; and as we have been invited and urged—by papers published in this city, and by men who claim to represent the interests of Memphis to cast our suffrages with the Republicans, it is important to understand the sentiments of that party. We quote, therefore, the language of those northern orators, possess and preachers, as demonstrating conclusively, that, in spite of their disavowal of any participation or complicity in Old Brown's treason, it was his failure and not the attempt which met with the regret of the Republicans. How, indeed, could it be otherwise? Does not the whole Republican party, and one man, believe that the relation of master and slave is sinful, and contrary to natural justice and divine right? Do not the members of that party believe that every slave is entitled to his freedom—that he may lawfully run away from his master, and that he may rightfully resist, even unto death, any attempts to restrain or recapture him? Have they not solemnly protested against the fugitive slave law as being equally opposed to the Constitution and the conscience of a Christian nation, and have they not, in every State, where they have had the power, interposed legislative obstacles in the way of the execution of that law, and of the reclamation and rendition of slaves? Do they not approve and justify the harboring and sheltering of fugitive slaves, and the furnishing them with money and arms to enable them to effect their escape? and have they not, in many places, forcibly rescued them from the hands of their masters, and the custody of the law—invading for the purpose even the precincts of the court house and the presence of judges?

How, then, can any Republican pretend to say that he does not approve, in principle, at least, the plan of old Brown and his confederates? If it be lawful to help one slave to his liberty—why not a thousand? If the right to place a weapon in the hands of one negro, to enable him to resist and slay the slave-catcher—why not arm the slave population of a county or State? Foolish, mad, quixotic, if they please, the Republicans may call the wild attempt of old Brown—but they cannot, with sincerity, say that they do not think it just and righteous, and that if successful, they would not have justified and applauded it. It will be said, perhaps, in their own defense, by those among us who advocate a coalition with the Republicans, that we do injustice to that party, in ascribing to it views which are only entertained by a few Abolitionists of the ultra-Garrisonian school. We are not mistaken. The sentiments to which we refer are those of the least violent and most moderate of the freesoil party. The Abolitionists go much farther. They advocate the immediate abolition of slavery by the Federal Government, or failing in that, a dissolution of the Union. The Republicans disclaim any intention of interfering by legislative enactments, at all events, with slavery in the States, where it at present exists. This disclaimer of all power of legislative interference with the institution, is, in fact, the very ground upon which Mr. Davis and others advocate a union of the Opposition—a fusion of the Americans with the Republicans. Of the private efforts of individual men to help slaves out of bondage the Republicans no more disapprove than they do of the efforts of the slaves themselves to effect their own escape. We do, therefore, the Republicans no injustice when we hold them as a party responsible for the treason of old Brown. His design was in perfect keeping with all their ideas upon the subject of slavery, although we do not believe that many of them could have been found like him foolish enough or bold enough to attempt its execution.

THE SCHILLER FESTIVAL.

The procession in Philadelphia on Wednesday evening in honor of the centennial anniversary of the birth of Schiller, the German poet, was a most imposing affair. From the Ledger's account we take the following:

The headquarters of the Young Mennerchor were brilliantly illuminated, and adorned with flags, besides having a transparency bearing a full length likeness of Schiller, and the names of the societies in the line. The headquarters of the old Mennerchor, immediately above, were illuminated. A large bell was placed in one of the upper windows, and rung at intervals. A bust of Schiller was also displayed, besides a number of flags. Several public and private houses in the vicinity were also illuminated. In Fourth street, above Wood, a number of rockets were sent up and a variegated light burnt. The Free Press office was illuminated, and the name of Schiller, in large letters, was displayed by means of small lits of gas. A transparency representing William Tell shooting the apple from his son's head, was also placed in front of the office. A number of other houses in the neighborhood were brilliantly illuminated. Third street, from Vine up to beyond Brown, was lit up with a perfect blaze of light, in consequence of the number of houses illuminated and the display of fire works, &c. The German Democrat office presented a beautiful appearance. Just below Green an arch was thrown across the street, with the name of Schiller in jets of gas.

At Fourth and Race several fine displays were made; one house was adorned with a number of handsome transparencies, among which we noticed the likeness of Martin Luther, Schiller, Robert Blum and others. Houses in Race street, between Third and Fourth, and at the corner of Third, and thence down to Second, and down Second to Arch, were also illuminated. In fact, there were quite handsome displays of this kind in all the streets through which the procession passed. The various societies in the line were largely represented, nearly every man in the line bearing a blazing torch, (thereby) illuminating the street, and making a very imposing appearance. A great number of banners and transparencies were carried in the line. A bell, made of this gauze, illuminated, attracted much attention. A large bell was kept ringing, and a printing press, at the head of the "geographical Society, with the gentleman busily engaged in printing a brief sketch of the life of Schiller, in German and English, which was distributed to the crowd. The procession was headed by Major Selfridge and staff, followed by the Black Hussars and several other military companies, and the various societies as noticed in the programme.

Cannon were fired from the starting of the procession until its arrival at the Academy of Music. At this place all the torches were thrown in a pile and allowed to burn, during which time an address was delivered by the chairman of the festival committee, and singing by the combined societies. At this point, as well as about all the prominent points in which the procession passed, great crowds of our citizens assembled.

The following letter from President Buchanan is in reply to an invitation to attend the celebration:

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4, 1859.

MY DEAR SIR: Many thanks for your kind invitation, on behalf of the committee of arrangements, to unite with my German fellow-citizens of Philadelphia, at their approaching celebration of the centennial anniversary of Schiller's birth. Would that I could attend. The occasion is one after my own heart. I deeply regret that important and pressing public engagements render the enjoyment of this privilege impossible.

Schiller died too young for his country; but yet in the maturity of his fame and his usefulness. He was, as you truly say, the beloved poet of the German nation, and well does he deserve this endearing distinction. His genius has done honor, not only to his fatherland, but to humanity. There is a grandeur in the idea that "William Tell" is the subject of Schiller's last and best tragedy, and that the great poet should thus forever have identified himself with the cause of Helvetia's liberty and independence.

Yours, very respectfully,
JAMES BUCHANAN.

In New York there was also a handsome celebration. It commenced on Wednesday evening with a grand concert at the City Assembly Rooms, the great feature of which was Beethoven's Choral Symphony, by an orchestra of 70 performers, and the German Liederkranz. The second day's performance consisted of a play at the German theater, and tableaux vivants, illustrating passages in the life of the poet, at the Academy of Music.

We have likewise accounts of similiar celebrations at Richmond, Va., Washington, D. C., Harrisburgh, Penn., and various other places.

HOW TO LEARN TO SWIM.

From the London Once-a-Week.]

The few remarks lately made in this publication on swimming, as a desirable art and exercise for women, have occasioned inquiries as to how women can learn to swim. What means exist, it is asked, for enabling girls to use their limbs in the water?

In such a case as this, the supply of a want must first precede the demand, the demand then arises and the supply follows. When parents show a desire that their daughters should swim, instructors and means will turn up; just as a dancing school is sure to be instituted in any rising town, when the need of one has been talked of for a little while. First then, let parents and daughters make known their opinion that it is desirable that girls and there will soon be as many swimming schools in England as there are in France.

In the Englishwoman's Journal of August, 1859, page 371, there is an account, if it be a thing of a metropolitan swimming bath for ladies in the Marylebone road, where instructions is said to be given "by an efficient female teacher." It seems to me that when we have got "an efficient female teacher," we have got all that we want for the basis of a system of any extent. There are multitudes of young women on the look out for means of honest subsistence. Why should not the teacher at the St Marylebone Public Baths instruct ten, twelve, or twenty strong and willing girls to swim, in order to teach others to swim? The fathers and mothers in any town or village who wish their children to learn should inquire at these baths; and, if there is yet no supply, should cause a proper young person to be instructed.

Wherever there are good and spacious baths for women there seem to be some women who can swim. At Liverpool, where the baths are admirable, there are several ladies who are perfectly at home in the water. If each of these ladies should instruct some promising girl or girls from the schools in their art, in order to make it their occupation, no doubt the next generation of women in Liverpool would be swimmers in much greater proportion than the present. Let other towns and any country neighborhood where there is good water, provide baths of sufficient size, either by mooring bathing houses in the streams, or by making shallow docks on shore, and teachers will presently offer. If not, it would be no great expense for the combined parentage of a neighborhood to bring over a swimming mistress from France. There are probably several at the bathing places along the coast; and there are certainly many at Paris, if one may judge by the accomplishment of Frenchwomen in the art.

What prevents fathers teaching their own children in infancy? The earliest time is the best for learning an art which is never difficult. In most countries in the world—actually over the greater part of the inhabited globe—the children swim as soon as they walk, if not earlier. In Egypt, and throughout all Mongolian countries, and among the indigenous races of America, and throughout the negro lands of Africa, and in Polynesia, the human being is amphibious. There children of both sexes can spend the whole day in the water, and explore it at pleasure. In the Nile country, who has passed the first cataract can tell how it is among the Berber infants, and indeed along the whole course of the Nile. English children would do the like, if they were early put in the way of it. Their mothers are proper persons to put them in the way of it; and, as the mothers are at present unpolished, the task is not a time. Alas, for poor Gerrit Smith! He has gone, and the way he rode was by the Black-Republican path. They wanted to prove Old Brown mad—they have made Smith mad.—N. Y. News.

An Elopement and a Compromise.

Canada is prolific in love affairs, and has frequently furnished themes for desertations on domestic bliss and the relations of husband and wife. Just now we have another case, wherein a married man forgets his first love, and takes upon himself a more youthful and bewitching partner. The denouement occurred at the Michigan Exchange Hotel, in this city yesterday morning at a very early hour. Thomas Bulmer had no occasion to forget the affections of his lawful wife, who, besides rendering him important services when in trouble with the police authorities of Windsor, by her tears and entreaties rescuing him from deserved punishment, has been the main stay of the family, whom she has supported out of the profits of a snug little millinery shop. Her husband for some time past has been engaged as a school teacher in the township of Colchester, down on the lake shore, where he became enamored of a young lady, the daughter of a respectable Yankee preacher, the name of Little. Eliza Little was fair to look upon, and but fifteen years of age. Bulmer possessed the contrary personal, and was not less than forty years down the scale of life. It would be folly to attempt a surmise as to the origin of any enlearing sensations between these two; but somehow it happened that they formed a mutual attachment, which nothing but the bonds of wedlock could satisfy. Mrs. Bulmer was an obstacle in the way of the accomplishment of this desired end; and Mrs. Bulmer, if informed, would not probably surrender her claims upon the unhappy man on any such grounds as this. Such being the case, it was naturally conjectured that the parents of the fair young girl would interpose various objections to a matrimonial alliance, and was doubtful whether the object could in any legitimate way be accomplished. Thereupon, illegitimate means were resorted to, and at a late hour on Monday night the loving couple left for parts unknown.

The state of affairs was quickly discovered by Eliza's family, who at once instituted a search. One of her brothers got upon the right track, and arrived at Windsor about half an hour after the pursued. It being then but a little after midnight, none of the ferryboats were running; but a ferryman with a skiff was found who had just returned from this side of the river, having brought over a couple of passengers who seemed to be in great haste, and who answered the description of the ones sought for. The brother was therefore at once brought over, and, on going to the Michigan Exchange, found the parties in the enjoyment of their coveted consummate bliss. They refused to be separated, declaring their determination henceforth to forget the things of the past, and to be one to each other.

Finding remonstrance and threats of no avail to change their purposes, the brother informed his sister that as she had disgraced his family by her conduct, she might enjoy the ill gotten pleasure, which would be her reward for a short duration. He left her with her paramour, with whom she took an early train yesterday morning for the West.

Bulmer will be remembered as the individual who had some difficulty with the Great Western railway company about a year since, he having received and appropriated some freight consigned to other persons. He was shielded from punishment through the entreaties of the wife he has now so shamefully deserted.—Detroit Free Press.

GONE AT LAST!—Poor Gerrit Smith! Abolitionist has abolished the Patriarch sage. He has paid the mental penalty of his lean logics, and wholly surrendered his brain to the fool doctrines of the Black-Republican party. Only yesterday he was the very Nile crocodile of lunatic asylum (not the Republican institution) and put away from the sensible portion of humanity. We sincerely sympathize with his friends. They were so fresh in the rumor so extensively circulated by the Tribune, that Gov. Wise had made a demand on Gov. Morgan for Mr. Smith. It was a cruel hoax at such a time. Alas, for poor Gerrit Smith! He has gone, and the way he rode was by the Black-Republican path. They wanted to prove Old Brown mad—they have made Smith mad.—N. Y. News.

961 acres four miles north of Point Rock Depot, in Jackson county, Alabama; adjoining the above, 400 acres cultivated land, and is reported to be one of the best cotton plantations in that part of Alabama. In reference to this last mentioned plantation, call on J. W. Scruggs, Huntsville, Alabama, or on me here.

Having shown the value of this remedy depends upon its purity, and in order to secure our customers a pure article, one of our firm went to Newfoundland to superintend the manufacture of our oil, and to warrant it pure. So that the table has the castle and tower, and the signature of the firm of Hegeman, Clark & Co., is a great deal of cheap, inferior oil palmed off for genuine, to the great injury of patients.

Ask for Hegeman, Clark & Co.'s, and take no other, as many have been cured with the genuine who have used others without any benefit.

USEFUL IN EVERY FAMILY.—Paint, Grease spots, etc., removed instantly. The cleanse, and is declared equal to new, without injury to the most delicate color or fabric, by HEGEMAN & Co.'s Concentrated Benzine. Only 25 cents per bottle. Hegeman & Co., Druggists, 161, 199 and 155 Broadway, N. Y.
