MONDAY ON THE BRAIN OF J. C. JONES.

[From the Paris Bazoo.]

Another plot! Jones has cut his throat this morning. Another after has throbbing on within the midnight hour.

Believing it well to release him the Chillicothe rule: Which stands above his disposed, could, then stick upon the valve.

So, we take up the fallen now, from its bright south high.

He hands was not his account impossible and free dis. Upon the chart of John is [illegible] his arms clear and bright.

Around the sons of greatness death spreads no dreary night.

Beside the fairest now with wreaths of fadeless cypress grown.

And [illegible] our hearts is warm, [illegible] shall [illegible] never.

Thus this is for a nation right to assume its [illegible].

As sent the Rule on his state to the [illegible] Jones is no more, closed that bright eye, not opened that earlier dawn.

Where notes make with sadness, the eagle flutter [illegible].

Along the mountain waves it swept, along the verdant shore.

And [illegible] echoed that three stern Mississippi's roar.

The lion arm, which bade as one, the throne and that affrays.

Shall be wielded by him with gracious, the throughtfare of [illegible].

Each works as three are mutuments, not fond of Parian art.

Their national in nature, a monument nation's heart.

Our aim in the vision then, he is no more by chart.

Fresh hopes as his aspirations, [illegible] never be.

The wandering sons of story, hath dropped for him a [illegible].

Which, dimly in fadeless stars a tale the page will [illegible].

CAMDEN, TENN., January, 1860. WILLIS R. SIMS.

EVERETT ON THE LAWRENCE CATASTROPHE AND THE DEATH OF MACAULAY.

At the celebration of the Franklin Typographical Society at Boston, last Tuesday evening, Mr. Everett repeated his oration on the "Early Days of Franklin," prefacing it with the following remarks:

I shall do injustice to the audience before which I have the honor to appear, and to myself, if I could begin to address you on any subject without first giving utterance, on your behalf and my own, to the feelings of unmingled grief caused by the recent calamity at Lawrence. While our first emotions are those of unavailing sorrow at the sacrifice of life (terrible in amount, and doubly so for the great society with which it is many ties I must have been accompanied,) and of Christian sympathy with sufferer survivors and bereaved friends, it is our duty to cherish sentiments of devout thankfulness to the gracious Providence, by which limits were placed to the work of destruction, and hundreds were snatched from the very jaws of death. Nor can we fail to take a melancholy pleasure in reflecting that the indescribable horrors of the scene were relieved by displays of Christian resignation and solid-like heroism, in the humbler walks of life, not to be surpassed in the history of our race. The poor child, so cheerful and unselfish, refused to be rescued till Mr. Nash was saved, and who was crushed before her turn came; the little girl, who, when she perceived that her own escape was impossible, held out her doll to her more fortunate companion, amid the scorching flames, saying, "Take this to remember me by;" and the young man, who, when asked "Are you not afraid to meet your Father?"—replied no further response) for the company of the people, to which, like the people of old, they were caught up in a chariot of fire. Nor will you blame me if, in connection with this calamity, at our door, I allude to the melancholy tidings which have been reached us from abroad, of the death of the most brilliant writer of our age and country whose acquaintance for thirty years have been the wonder and delight of all who read the English language, beneath the circuit of the sun; an author who, as it seems to me, more than any other, moulded or modified, or, if not moulded in a company of historians—most of whom I have the pleasure to see in two of them with himself mournfully sleeping the year which has just closed; any one of whom would have been a literary lion on the age in which he lived. That in the intensity with which he threw himself into the scenes described by him; and took part, so to say, in the great events of the time, he never fell into the error of judgment or made a false estimate of character, nor yet he maintained a one-sided view of a question, in the country. An honest and fearless thinker and writer, he could not avoid collision of opinion and feeling with those who differed from him. But his errors were apple are the exceptions. Better than this, in Lord Macaulay (truly a nobleman by heaven's patent) the writer was more admirable than the man, the splendor of his page was excelled, if possible, by the brilliancy of his conversation and the charm of his personal intercourse. All who knew his personal peculiarities, the magnificence of his diction, his miraculous range of memory, which grasped the literature of every language and held all treasures at of illustration present at command; but those who knew him loved for the snuff-ed meekness with which he bore his transcendent powers, the sweet cheerfulness of his disposition, the generous warmth of his heart.

The Falls of the Niagara Surpassed in India.

Dispatch of our correspondent hear of the Government Falls, near Hoosy? If not, they will probably be well with some pleasure a description which has just appeared in the Calcutta papers. It is curious that a fall six times the depth of Niagara should prove to almost unknown. The villages of Gurhwoo, then, reached by a river of the same name, the writer was carried for twelve miles on the Mahomed's road, and reached the Falls Rameshwar about three hours and a half after leaving the pass. An amphitheater of woods and a river about five hundred yards wide, rushing and boiling in a rocky bed, and then lost in a perpetual mist and in an unceasing deafening roar, met first be imagined. Leaving the Rameshwar on the left, and with the guide, descending to a position below the river level, you work your way up carefully and tediously over slippery rocks, until you reach a point where a shoot and a half in the side of a huge body jets over a precipice. Resting flat upon this rock, and looking over it, you see directly before you two of the four original falls (these two are called the "Great Falls" and "The Rocks"). The rock continues a large body of water, the main body of the river, varying from yards across, and the rock is massive and apparently adaptable into the chasm below, and the other contains a smaller body of water, which, as shown and be seen, are the over successive points of rocks, till it falls into the same chasm. This chasm is at least nine hundred feet in depth—at times the depth of the Niagara Falls, which are about one hundred and fifty feet, and perhaps a quarter to a half mile in width.

The first view you have of two falls to be visited, then comes a little below your first position, and you will observe first a turgid boiling body of water of greater volume than the Rocky Fall, rushing and dashing down into the same chasm; this is the third fall, the "Rocks." Then, carrying your eye a little further down, you will observe another fall, the broadest, softest, and most graceful of all, being a broad expanse of shallow water falling like transparent silver lace over a smooth surface of polished rock into this same chasm; this is "La Dame Blanche" and the White Lady of Avenel could not have been more graceful and ethereal. At no point will a fair idea of the depth of the chasm I to which these glorious waters fall? Take out your watch and drop down a piece of rock as you can hold, from your viewing place; it will be several seconds before you can lose sight of the piece of rock, and then it cannot be heard, and yet, at the foot of the chasm—it will only have been lost to human sight. But you have yet only seen one, and that not perhaps the least grand. The rock is the most comprehensive, view of the falls. Pass to the Menage side of the falls, walking first to a point where you will see three of all at a glance, and then descending as near as you can to the foot of them, to be drenched by the spray, deafened by the noise, and amazement by the grandeur of the scene, and by the power of the Creator of it. In the personal relation, how many and brilliant hues which spans the foot of the chasm.

Shocking Tragedy.

On Wednesday night last, about seven or eight o'clock, one of the most shocking tragedies occurred at Tipton Ford, on the Hatchie, within sight of this place, which we have ever been called upon to record. Samuel Jay, a baker of this place, who has long supported the fidelity of his wife, went home on Wednesday night, about the time above indicated, and finding his wife at the house, went to the stable, to which place he followed footsteps in the snow which had just fallen, where he found her in company with some man who she called doctor, but did not mention his name. He then ran to a house near by and borrowed a gun, a neighbor to go with him to the stable, where the man was found crouching in a corner for concealment, and he had left the house. Upon seeing Mr. Jay in the act of drawing his knife, the doctor made a sudden plunge, and bursting the door of the stable open, made his escape, leaving his hat behind him. Jay and his friend then went to the house, and as they were entering through the kitchen, in which his little son, aged about ten years, was sitting, a gun was fired and the whole charge of shot took effect in the face of the little boy, principally entering into the right eye. The boy managed to breathe in ten or fifteen minutes afterward.

We have not heard Mr. Jay's version of the affair, only that she gave Mr. Jay has been in the habit of shooting boys, and apprehended that he would do so again on that occasion, she merely intended to scare him, and unfortunately shot her son, for which she seems to be greatly distressed.

Coroner Brown held an inquest over the dead body the same night, and the jury rendered a verdict that the deceased came to his death by the discharge of a gun, supposed to have been held in the hands of Mrs. Jay.

We understand she has expressed a wish to have a grand jury called at the present special term of the circuit court, to which the case may be presented.—Paris (Ill.) Beacon.

WHAT THE LADIES DID.—Writes[illegible] somebody—a lady, perhaps—from New York, to the Traveller, about shopping:

I have seen one dress purchased at a well-known house, which, with the trimmings, cost $450. It is of violet color moire of the richest quality, scrigged with purple. The trimmings consisted of seven narrow flounces, covered with crimson of myrtle green, and embellished with a broad band of black velvet just above the hem. Another dress purchased at the same store is one of grenelle color silk, which cost $250. It is figured with small bouquets of flowers, and has nine narrow flounces, each edged with velvet. But the corsage is its most beautiful feature, dreamed of as it is with a fichu-form of tulle, trimmed with blonde. The proprietor of the former is a Brazilian lady, the wife of a diplomatic functionary; and the latter is the bridal present of a New York merchant prince to his niece, one of the most beautiful young ladies in the Fifth Avenue.

A PRIZE FIGHTER.—A man named Benjamin Lynds has been recently arrested in Chicago, charged with rape. What quality of a man he is appears in the following, which we take from the Chicago Herald, of the 18th:

Both he and the girl, we are told, are members of the Edion Place Baptist church, which room is notorious for the efforts that were made to fight the matter up. Lynds appears to be one of those christian church members who have been called upon from time to time to make public exhibitions of their piety. After committing the act, which deprived the young girl of her virtue and blasted all her future hopes of happiness, he said he knelt down by her side and offered up a fervent prayer! Also, that when taken to the jail he devoted a little to his bed, with a view, doubtless, to seek in the dreamness of his cell, consolation in reading the Gospel.

Lynds was married only three days before his arrest when the famous charge now pending against him. The girl, Ella Beebe, avers that, since, and the sense of disgrace prevented her from telling her mother what happened, until all hope of his fulfilling the promise of marriage be had on a was gone. When that was the case the knowledge that he was also an adulteress known caused her to reveal all the facts.

WHERE THE COLD WEATHER COMES FROM. During the past year the Smithsonian Institution, through its extended system of meteorological observations, has been enabled to make some very curious investigations respecting the three memorable cold days of January, 1859 which have almost found a parallel in the weather experienced the last week.

It was found that the cold of the three days above mentioned swept progressively over the country like a wave, coming down from the Arctic regions and first entering the territory of the United States at the extreme northwest, among the Rocky mountains. It was experienced at Utah some three days before it reached the banks of the Northern Mississippi, and was heralded by telegraph at Montreal, some two days before it reached Washington. At Buffalo it was some hours in advance of Boston, and was felt last on the Atlantic ocean, where it appears to have disappeared. This cold wave also swept south in a most remarkable manner, and progressively appeared in Florida and other Southern States, and Mexico; and the last pulsations, as it died away, in this direction, being experienced in Central America and among the West India Islands. Taken all in all, it was one of the most remarkable meteorological phenomena ever noticed, and the facts collected seem to prove that the circulating impulse came from the extreme northwestern portion of the American continent.

Judging from our experience thus far this month, we are inclined to think that the northwest waves have broken loose again.

Testimonials.

The public attention is invited to the following test of the Bocage Cotton Press, witnessed the operation of the Jack Screw Cotton Press:

PINE BLUFF, April 26th, 1858.

Hon. J. W. Brooks—Dear Sir: I have one of your Jack Screw Cotton Presses in operation. It performs admirably. It presses more than double the amount of cotton that I have been in the habit of packing on other presses.

Its great durability should commend it to every planter, and its simple that I could hardly get it out of order. It occupies but little room in the house—is more expeditious and powerful than any other Press, and believe as time is tested it will prove there will be no other press used.

I recommend every planter to get one. Any ordinary press builder can set up one.

Yours, &c., ISRAEL EMBREE.

The undersigned, having utilized the operations of Rector's Jack Screw Cotton Press, take pleasure in adding to the entire correctness of the above statements.

Testimonials.

The public attention is invited to the following test of the Bocage Cotton Press, witnessed the operation of the Jack Screw Cotton Press:

PINE BLUFF, April 26th, 1858.

Hon. J. W. Brooks—Dear Sir: I have one of your Jack Screw Cotton Presses in operation. It performs admirably. It presses more than double the amount of cotton that I have been in the habit of packing on other presses.

Its great durability should commend it to every planter, and its simple that I could hardly get it out of order. It occupies but little room in the house—is more expeditious and powerful than any other Press, and believe as time is tested it will prove there will be no other press used.

I recommend every planter to get one. Any ordinary press builder can set up one.

Yours, &c., ISRAEL EMBREE.

The undersigned, having utilized the operations of Rector's Jack Screw Cotton Press, take pleasure in adding to the entire correctness of the above statements.

The following testimonials are that class mechanics of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, and vicinity:

PINE BLUFF, April 28, 1858.

We, the undersigned, have seen Rector's Cotton Press in the general, believe that Bocage's Press is the most simple, efficient, durable and economical press with which we are acquainted.
