DREAMING.

[For the Memphis Appeal.]

When on the pale subtle certain spreads,
And in it the shadows lie;
And the pale moon her pathway treads,
Across the cloudy sky!
And thoughts will the spirits like,
Amidst forms dressed below—
The world and lost of love are
Sweet bonds together through the all,
And something beside that seem
Breathed by the lips of beauty fair,
Whose bright eyes rivally be in!
And words are whispered in the ear,
The promise for her all to hear,
But, oh, 'tis all a dream!
The bright illusion fades away,
The beautiful, alas, to stay,
But there are dreams that linger still,
When glooms night is gone;
Nor then wings of its early wile and kill,
Made forth the silent dawn;
But varies with strange and magic art,
Their witching spell around the heart,
And lead the dreamer off!
While he the phantom are sweeter,
Through mortalite heat and morning dew.

The pretty anything dreams of fame,
And save her treasure bright!
While home and a gilded name,
Flashes before the sight;
He hears the ranged left to music,
To drink of immortality at the fount,
And woman with delight,
Crowns him, then, when strife is over,
It is a dream, and nothing more.

The miser dreams of heaps of gold
And silver, all his own!
Of wealth from his coffers rolled,
Of worth and name unknown!
And ponders on the gems that shine,
Like stars within some hidden mine,
That shall be his alone!
Now he wends and the dream
Of gold—but it is all a dream.

The poet views shall the heaven
And blend of youthful verse;
And dreams over the sunny hours,
Where birds and streamlets and
And sees the more in silver and
And vision of gold and crimson dyed,
And dark's resplendent hide,
Walls on in splendor till the day
Is purple twilight flies away!

He goes at the fading skies,
And takes more star,
And sees a fairy paradise,
Beneath the evening star!
And dwelling amidst the night,
Is it some angel in his flight,
But left the gates ajar!
Creativity beauties round him shine—
It is a dream, yet 'tis divine.

But there are dreams that linger still,
Are trooping like a dove!
That yield unto the soft control
Of hope, and joy, and love;
And there are longings for a heart,
Thine, wholly thine, and to
And sympathies that upon
In union with thine, to live
And all life's cares with happiness.

Dreams of a sweet and lovely form,
A sound whose tones to fall!
All smooth and pensive to a charm,
Is laid her slumber by!
Who, while the feeling moments glide,
Is closely seated by your side,
Within that sweet chair;
Yet, what the thinking ever here—
It is a dream and "tis a dream!"

Danger of Another Delugo—The Northern Hemisphere to be Submerged, and a New World from the South.

[From Gallignani's Messenger, December 21.]

We have had occasion to peruse a remarkable work just published, entitled "Comments of Revolutions de l'Atmosphere et de la Mer," by Lieutenant Jullien, a distinguished officer in the French navy; the greater part of the book is devoted to a general description of Lieutenant Maury's splendid theory of currents and winds, by which he explains the recurrence of storms and other meteorological phenomena; but what has chiefly attracted our attention is a new theory on the enviable periodical return of a comet, similar to that known under the name of the Universal Deluge, a subject which the author treats with singular lucidity, and of which we will here endeavor to give an outline.

The author starts from certain facts, some of which are generally known, viz: 1. That the northern hemisphere (from the same degree of warmth is observed on our globe,) of the highest temperature are unequally distributed between Southern and Northern Hemispheres, the space, they occupied by the former being about double of that which they occupy south of the equator, on that the Southern Hemisphere is a much colder climate, especially toward the pole, than the northern one; 2, that the accumulation of ice at the Antarctic pole is much more considerable than that of the northern; 3, that we have good reason for supposing that at one revolution, viz: that nearer the northern, much more rapidly than the other, and at that period of the year which corresponds to the autumn and winter of the northern hemisphere. Hence it follows that the winter of the latter is shorter (by about eight days) than that of the southern hemisphere, and it is during this long winter, when the earth is farthest from the sun, that the solar rays must lose in strength what they gain in duration. To this cause of diminution of temperature must be added the loss of caloric by radiation, and it will then be easy to perceive the reason of the difference of temperature between the two hemispheres. Observation, however, has shown that the quantity of caloric lost at the south pole in the course of a year is equal to the surplus absorbed at the north pole.

Now let us, with the author, mentally represent to ourselves the earth at the moment of its creation, when its whole surface was covered with the primitive ocean. From this moment its revolution around the sun commenced, and all these causes which have led to the inequality of temperature between the two hemispheres begin to operate. In the course of a few months the ice at the South Pole became in consequence much heavier than that accumulated at the North Pole, as the center of gravity was displaced southward; mathematicians, in fact, state the distance between the latter and the geometrical center to be about 1700 meters. Under these circumstances, what could the liquid surface of the globe do but flow southward, leaving the polar continent we see so familiar with uncovered? Here M. Jullien observes that all the regions of the Southern Hemisphere bear unmistakable marks of submersion; that America, Africa and India end in points, all turned toward the South Pole; that the islands of the southern regions have the appearance of the summit of mountains, and that Lieut. Maury's soundings show that the coasts on that side descend abruptly into the sea. He further states the curious fact that in going from the North to the South Pole, at every parallel the ratio of the extent of land to that of the sea diminishes regularly and progressively.

Let us now take into consideration the phenomenon called the Procession of the Equinoxes, in virtue of which, the first point of Aries recedes upon the ellipic by about 50 seconds in a year. This gradually causes a complete change in the seasons, and requires from one given time, there must elapse at least 21,000 before the seasons can return at precisely the same periods of the year. It has been ascertained that up to the year 1248 of the Christian Era, a year in which the first day of winter precisely coincided with the earth's passage through its perihelion, the temperature of the southern hemisphere was much more constant course of diminution. It is moreover clear that after a lapse of 10,500 years, the seasons on our globe must be exactly reversed.

Hence, about 10,500 years before the year 1248, or 11,600 years before our present time it was the North Pole, and not the opposite one, which was in its maximum of refrigeration; our present continents were then submerged, according to the Mosaic tradition of the Deluge, and there were continents unknown to us in the Southern Hemisphere. And again, by the same astronomical and natural laws, 10,500 after the last cataclysm, a new one will again submerge the northern Hemisphere, and allow a new world to emerge from the ocean in the southern one.

Such is the theory of M. Jullien—a theory, we must add, which is in perfect accordance with the sphere of our actual knowledge.
