CONFIDENCE.

BY ROBERT JOCELYN.

The revealer soul of the heart,
The consoler author of the mind,
Of human life the animal part,
Is confidence in human kind.

Without it what is life? A wreck,
Adrift upon a stormy sea,
Where every billow swamps the deck,
Nor land nor light the eye can see.

Too doubt the parent, brother, friend,
The child's and the loved one's kiss;
Could hells a more colossal torture send
A sharper misery than this.

Not one in whom you may confide,
Not one on whom you may rely;
Begirt with foes on every side,
Oh! to live, afraid to die.

Who has confidence in man,
Can have no faith in God—his life
Is under heaven's rainbow ban,
A counterpart of Cain and strife.

The true this world is full of sin,
That trust and treachery abound,
That knave and villain in high places,
And truth is outlawed to be hunted;

That love may change and friends betray
Till life's affords hope may seem,
As one by one they fade away,
A mocking vision, idle dream.

Yet will I trust while I have breath,
In honor, friendship, truth and love,
And whatever everyone can do in life
Will back with steadfast faith above.

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS., February, 1860.

THE LITTLE WIDOW LITTLE.

The little Widow Little lived in a little house beside a little river in the little town of S——. The widow was now single, although she had been double. Naughty death had carried off her mate. At morn he was well and rosy; at night he was a corpse.

The widow was young, although she had been younger. Fourteen summers had given her a beau, and sixteen summers a husband; for a youth had sparked, won, and wed her, ere her sixteenth summer's sun had shed its soft, pure rays upon her.

Ah! this strange, strange world; as full of hopes and fears—as full of smiles and tears! Misfortune had knocked at the widow's door—sorrow had touched her heart; but the little widow had friends who soothed her little heart, calmed her little fears, and ministered to her little wants; and gradually sweet little smiles took the place of moist little tears, and her merry lie laugh rang like soft music upon the ears of many a young bachelor.

The little widow was pretty, but she was getting a little wild; and often she said modestly to her little self: "True, the partner of my little bosom is gone, but then, isn't he in heaven, near Pet Lamb, the sweet lamb ever make him in this wicked world, and a thousand times better off than I? And why should I sich and fret? to be sure, it is naughty to think of the man so soon after he has left—when they are so much inferior to him—still I will now and then smile and chat a little with them, just to show them my pretty teeth and sweet lips, and cheer them up a very, very little."

Ah! the blossoming little widow, with the rose upon her cheek and honey upon her lip—true, not "sweet sixteen," but ripe, charming twenty-one.

"What teeth!" said the dentist.

"What hair!" said the hair-dresser.

"What hands!" said the glove-maker.

"What a heart!" said the dress-maker.

"What a foot!" said the shoemaker; "if her soul is as fair as her sole, how nice!"

"What a step!" said the dancing-master.

"What a sweet voice!" said the singing master.

"What pretty speech!" said the French teacher.

"Let oh! what cheeks and lips!" said the admiring schoolmaster.

Then old bachelors began to sigh, and old maids began to grow nervous, while youth began to weave its web to crush the little widow.

Miss Pickerel—a slim spinster of fifty summers—whose face Father Time had plowed with wrinkles, whose hair he had pretty much plucked from the place where nature first planted it, and whose body had long since flown or blown away—had, on a dark night, perched upon the ends of her shrivelled toes, peaped wickedly into the little widow's window, and seeing her sitting upon a sofa with a young man's arm thrown lovingly about her fair neck.

"Where?" said the old maids.

"Bah!" said the old bachelors.

The neighbors, the town—nay, the whole country—was disgraced.

Then the little widow was interrogated, and alas! she could not say no to the question—"Was it as Miss Pickerel said?" Her poor lips acknowledged, while her pretty cheeks blushed that that sweet lamb was, and more, that a young man had been stopping at her house—yes, lodging there—three mortal days! Could she be starving to death? Yes, but a tonsorial old maid of S——, who had remained so for fifty years!

"What of it?" said the little widow. "He is my——" Here she checked herself and blushed.

"Yes," said Miss Pickerel, "you say just as I would have you. Yes, he is your husband, say what; I know all now. Oh! that I should live in such a neighborhood!" And Miss Pickerel wiped the perspiration from her faded cheeks.

Soon the town was in commotion. The butcher laid down his cleaver, the barber his razor, the carpenter his broaver, the shoemaker his last, the tinman his mallet, and the house-maid her broom, to talk over the little widow's affairs.

Meantime, the youth who had caused this stir came and went, but said nothing. His mouth was shut, but his ears were open.

"The town won't hold her long," said Miss Pickerel, smoothing her shrivelled fingers the few lonely hairs which old time had kindly left upon her bald and glistening pate; "too hot for her."

"Madam," said the little widow's landlord, one morning, "you pay rent like a Hebrew—your gold is as good as any; but still—ahem!" And she said to her girls Mehabel, "I do not think you had better get another tenement; there's so much talk. I'll give you a month's time to get one."

"Very well," said the little widow, putting purse pock with her little soft hand—"one month will do."

The news soon went abroad, that the little widow was going to "pull up stakes, and move her traps."

"I see far," said the little widow, pouting her cherry lips, "I can hire another house, if I choose."

"You can't and shan't," said the ancient virgin with a fearful scowl. "We'll head you off there!"

And the landlords were waited upon and requested not to disgrace their houses with her presence.

"What has the little widow done?" said a stranger.

"Modesty forbids us to repeat it!" said the spinsters.

Sewing society night came around. The spinsters met, and were chattering like magpies when a modest knock was heard at the door—then—pitchforks and brimstone—there entered the little widow and her lover.

A shower of hot lava from Vesuvius would not have astonished them more than this sudden entrance.

"Bold-faced brass! impudence! shame!" exclaimed Miss Pickerel to herself.

Nobody said, "Take a seat," but the little widow, drawing herself up to her full hight, and with flashing eyes, said:

"I came hither, to explain the mystery which has hung over me, like a dark cloud, for some weeks. You have taken it upon you to slander my blameless life in all possible ways. Your tongues have been in perpetual motion, and full of venom."

Here the wicked old maids began to cringe, while little widow Little boldly went on:

"Strangers whom you have seen sitting in my room, who had come to my house, on whose presence and intentions you have chosen to construe in their worst light, so as to make my name a reproach to all around. is—my brother!

This was as unexpected and effective as a thunderbolt. The listeners held their breath, till, finally, Miss Pickerel contented her scattered wits sufficiently to inquire:

"Why didn't you explain before, and tell us who he was?"

"Because I could not," replied the little widow, "Circumstances rendered it necessary that we should keep the presence of my brother from a secret for a time. Now, that necessity is past; and I freely tell you that we have come in possession of a large fortune; and (were the little widow's chickens hatched) next month, I am to wed one whose virtues cannot be dimmed by the vulgar, slanderous tongues of female pirates, like those I now dishonor myself by addressing."

"Thus the little widow's trials were over, and a sense home, worthy mate, and happy days, caused her to forgive and forget the poisonous slanders of the old maids of S——.

Graphic Description of the Opening of Parliament.

The London Times, in giving an account of the opening of Parliament by the British Queen, says:

Sir E. Cust seems to be in strict charge of the diplomatic corpsl, which is gradually reinforced by the Norwegian, Belgian and Swedish ministers, with the exhaustors of France and Austria. The dean of Arches, in ministerial uniform, stands near the bar for a few minutes, and surveys the scene with airy lightness, then retires to rest on his robes of state, passing, in his way, Lord Cardigan, somewhat as usual so slowly up the house. The judges drop in in twos or threes, all conversing in low tones, with their heads together, as they sit in an amicus group of three or four in front of the lord chancellor. As is generally the case on these occasions, not a single prominent leader of the opposition is present.

At ten minutes past two o'clock, the sound of trumpets is heard; an usher enters in a great hurry and utters a few words, which have a magical effect on all around, for the peers rise, and, with an immense rustling of silks and satins, the ladies follow the example, and at a signal respond their shawls and opera cloaks; scarcely in this hurried operation over, which, as may readily be imagined, involves an immense amount of subsequent arrangement of ruffled toilets, are the doors of the house open and their royal highnesses the Princes Alfred and Heleno enter, the former in a rich blue dress, with rich, white lace over, the latter in a simple white dress. Both take their seats on the woolsack facing the throne, and with their hats on, remain in the house. The duke of Cambridge crosses to them, and remains in conversation, while the rest of the house sits mute, resting all upon that rich, uncomfortable, and strictly Gothic throne, with its straight, hard back and very angular arms which, if appearances are to be trusted, would seem to indicate that the uneasiness is not always reserved for "the heads that wear a crown."

Precisely at a quarter past two, the doors are again thrown open, the house rises, and amid a long flourish of trumpets, the procession preceding her Majesty enters the house. The heralds are first, bowing alike in their gorgeous tabards as they pass the princesses, the kings-at-arms carrying his loyalty so far as to bow alternately to them and to the empty throne. Then come Earl Granville, with the sword of State; the Marquis of Winchester, with the cap of maintenance; the marquis of Salisbury, with the crown; the Duke of Norfolk, with his baton as hereditary earl marshal; the Lord Chancellor, with his great seals. Her Majesty was superbly robed in silver tissue, with a train of crimson velvet lined with ermine. A magnificent diamonder of diamonds completely concealed the front of the dress, and on her head was the high massive demi-crown of brilliants usually worn on these occasions. Prince Albert, in the uniform of a field marshal, sets on the left of the throne.

Her majesty having requested their lordships to be seated, the commons were forthwith summoned; the interval which elapsed was passed in solemn silence—the queen, contrary to her custom, not speaking to any of the high personages who stood around her, the "faithful commons," being selected by ballot, not now, as formerly, rushing in like the gods in the poem of Homer "having nectar in our bowls," but, on the contrary, they came steadily up to the bar, the speaker leading, and on his right Lord Palmerston. Just, however, as the speech was begun, there was a great deal of noise, which occasioned a general "hushing," and brought the queen almost to a pause, but after this the most rigid silence prevailed.

DEATH OF THE GRAND DUCHESS STEPHANIE OF BADEN.—We regret to announce the death of the Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden, which event took place at Nice on Sunday afternoon, at half-past one o'clock. The Monitor, in giving this melancholy intelligence says:

"This sad occurrence, which causes profound sorrow to the Emperor, was anticipated for some days. The Duke of Hamilton, son-in-law of the Grand Duchess, had arrived on the previous evening; the Princess Mary, her daughter, suffering from grave indisposition, was not able to join her; and her other daughter, the Princess De Hohenzollern, only reached Marseilles on her way to Nice. The Emperor had sent Dr. Corvisart to the Grand Duchess, and he was able, in compliance with her wish, to prescribe. General Roguet, Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor, has left Paris to accompany the mortal remains of the Grand Duchess through France to the frontier of Baden."

The deceased princess was cousin to Napoleon III. Her maiden name was Stephanie de Beauharnais, and she was the niece of the Empress Josephine, and the adopted daughter of Napoleon I. Born in 1789, she was married in 1806 to Prince Louis Frederick of Baden. The Grand Duchess, at the time of her death, was in her seventy-first year.—Galignani's Messenger, Jan. 21.

HIGHLAND BITTERS!

—OR—

SCOTCH TONIC.

The Celebrated Harbinger of Health to all Nations.

"DRINK AND LIVE."

THIS most astonishing want of the nineteenth century is a sterling medicinal preparation to meet the want of the sick, and bring back to health one at the same time entirely free from deleterious ingredients was once visited to the Highlands of Scotland by a Highland Bitters, that valuable and most inestimable gift of health, was submitted to his search.

Sir George Sullivant, Professor of Military Surgery in the University of Edinburg, Scotland, after years of patient research, was enabled to inform the Queen of Queen Victoria, discovered a certain selection of choice herbs, which, combined with the Mountains of Scotland, which, when combined with the most extensive and powerful medicinal properties, the most superlative invigorator of the human system which the world has ever known.

As a conclusive proof of their intrinsic merit and superiority over all other bitters or stomach medicines, order or purchase a bottle. It may be stated that one half of THREE MILLION BOTTLES were sold last year in Great Britain alone, besides an enormous number exported to all parts of the world, the inimitable Highland Bitters.

The attributes of the Scotch Tonic is to prevent as well as cure by stirring up the vital or life principle, and thereby removing the hidden cause of disease, by acting immediately upon the liver, which is the great source of the system, and assisting nature in her task of vital and functionary regulation. So every one suffering from Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, Debility, Sick Headache, Coldness, Pimples on the Face and Body, and all diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, it is invaluable; and as a regulating family medicine, it is unrivalled. Sweetness, Indigestion, Torpidity, or any other form of dyspeptic complaint, find a perfect specific in one of the whole functions of the human system. Comparatively few doses of this palatable stomachic make the most perfect and complete alteration in all impediments, diseases all impurities, strengthens generally the system, and improves the health and spirits, has been known to fail in a single instance where it has been tried.

Persons who have used it for this purpose say it is a most valuable invigorator of the stomach, and for all kinds of weakness or stomach diseases of any kind. To mothers, who's health, these Bitters are indispensable, and more particularly to the maiden's nourishment is inadequate to the demands of the child.

To those who wish to exclude themselves from a life of discomfort to one of activity, these Bitters will most certainly disappoint the sanguine hopes of strong drinks, and restore both the functions of the mind and body to a sound healthy condition, and will ever like a charm, invigorate the robust, and drive away the Blue Mondays Nervous Stomach and all the usual attendants of dissipation.

These Bitters are prepared from the original recipe, by the sole manufacturing agents for the Southern States,

AS the only Physicians in the State who are members of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, may consider themselves entitled to the confidence of the public in every state and condition of disease.

The treatment they adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years' extensive and successful practice in Europe and America.

A MOST SCIENTIFIC INVENTION.

An instrument for the cure of Genital Debility, Spermatorrhœa, and Seminal Weakness, as certain as Death, and as simple as a child. Can be permanently cured in from 10 to 30 days, by the use of this instrument, when used according to the directions.

YOUNG MEN, TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE.

Gentlemen, we take pleasure in announcing that they have invented a most important instrument for the cure of the above diseases. It has been subjected to test of the most eminent physicians in London, Paris, Philadelphia and New York; it has been declared the most wonderful invention of the nineteenth century. Seminal Weakness, or any disease of the genital organs, should be treated before it leads to death.

Dr. Amos & Son, in order to satisfy the most skeptical as to the merits of their instrument, pledge themselves that in any instance where it may prove unsatisfactory, after a fair trial, the money will be refunded by return the instrument, in good order.

Persons wishing the above useful instrument, will serve their interest by addressing the undersigned, securely packed and sent by mail or express, in the dollars.

NEW REMEDIES AND QUICK CURES.

Dr. Amos & Son have, for a long period of years, had engaged in an extensive practice in the treatment of Chronic Diseases, and are the only regularly educated physicians who now advertise to cure certain complaints, of them whose genuine European remedies can be obtained.

Persons in any part of the world may be successfully treated by correspondence, or personal attendance with a remittance by medicine, etc., which will be regularly forwarded to any part of the United States or Canadas.

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS.

It is a fact that, at some period, every member of the human family is subject to disease or disturbance of the body functions, and that with the aid of a good tonic and the exercise of plain common sense, they may be able so to regulate the system as to secure permanent health. In order to accomplish this desired object, the true course to pursue is certainly that which will produce a natural state of things at the least hazard of vital strength and life. For the purpose, Dr. Hostetter has introduced to this country a preparation bearing his name, which is not a new medicine but one that has been tried for years, giving satisfaction to all who have used it. The Bitters operate powerfully upon the stomach, bowels and liver, restoring them to a healthy and vigorous action, and thus, by the simple process of strengthening nature, enable the system to triumph over disease.

For the cure of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Nausea, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, or any Bilious Complaints, arising from a morbid inactive state of the Stomach or Bowels, producing Cramp, Dysentery, Colic, Cholera Morbus, &c., the Bitters have no equal.

Diarrhœa, dysentery or flux, so generally contracted by new settlers, and caused principally by the change of water and diet, will be speedily regulated by a brief use of this preparation. Dyspepsia, a disease which is perhaps more prevalent, in all its various forms, than any other, and the cause of which may always be attributed to derangements of the digestive organs, can be cured without fail by using HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS, as per directions on the bottle. For this disease even physicians will recommend bitters if some kind they may not use an article known to be infallible! All of us have tried their Bitters, as a preventive of disease, and strengthener of the system in general; and among them all there is not to be found a more healthy people, than the Germans, from whom this preparation was stated, based upon scientific experiments which have continued to prove the value of the preparation in the scale of medical advance.

FEVER AND AGUE.—This trying and prevailing disease, which fixes its relentlessness upon the body of man, reducing him to a mere shadow in a short time, and rendering him physically and mentally useless, can be driven from the body by the use of HOSTETTER'S RENOWNED BITTERS. Further, none of the above-stated diseases can be contracted, even in exposed situations, if the Bitters are used as per directions. And as they neither weaken nor offend the palate, and I make no necessary any change of diet or interruption of ordinary pursuits, but promote sound sleep and healthy digestion, the only habit is required to be formed is one in connection with the production of a thorough and permanent cure.

For Persons in Advanced Years, who are suffering from an enfeebled constitution and infirm body, these Bitters are invaluable as a restorative of strength and vigor, and need only be tried to be appreciated. And to a mother while nursing these Bitters are indispensable, especially when the nourishment afforded is inadequate to the demands of the child, consequently her strength must yield and here it is where a good tonic such as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is needed to impart temporary strength and vigor to the system. Ladies should by all means try this remedy for all cases of debility, and, before so doing, should ask their physicians, who, if he is acquainted with the virtue of the Bitters, will recommend their use in all cases of weakness.

CAUTION.—We caution the public against using any of the many imitations or counterfeits, but ask for HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS and see that each bottle has the words "Dr. J. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters" blown on the side of the bottle, and stamped on the metallic capsuling the cork, and observe that our signature is on the label.

Age Prevents it and sold by HOSTETTER, SMITH, Pittsburgh, Pa., and sold by a druggists, grocers, and dealers generally throughout the United States, Canada, South America, and Germany.

OFFER for sale the plantation of the late Wm. Kirkwood, lying in Carroll county, near the center of the State, and on full view of the Central Railroad, now the great thoroughfare for the cotton crop of Mississippi. The place contains 1800 acres, 700 of which are in cultivation, 400 acres of the cleared land consists of first and second bottom, the balance of rolling uplands, 200 acres of which are cleared, the balance in small growth of never-failing water, and on the road by the Big Black river, thus affording an enhancement of value to the place. It is well improved, well fenced, well watered, and is situated in a neighborhood noted for its religious and moral character. Terms of the sale to suit a large and responsible dealer, all necessary information can be had by addressing the undersigned at Kirkwood, Carroll county, Mississippi.
