A BULL FIGHT IN SPAIN.

THE GIPSEY DANCE—THE CATHEDRAL, ETC. Correspondence of the N. Y. Evening Post.]

SEVILLE, February 15, 1860.

The walls have been for several days adorned with large placards announcing a bull fight in the Plaza de Toros, for the benefit of the wounded soldiers who originally went from Seville to the war. It was to begin at three in the afternoon, so I took a good place beforehand, and followed the crowd to the amphitheatre. I got out from a rough estimate that there were four thousand persons present, and the seats would have accommodated at least a thousand more. There were very few women among the spectators. The arena is a circle, and the seats rise round it in steps above each other. They have different prices, according to position. Those on the north side of the arena were not roofed, and were exposed to the sun. The eight highest st-ps on the south side were covered by a roof, and all the seats on the south side were shaded. The prices varied from twelve reals (about sixty cents) to one dollar and a half. Two bands of music were stationed opposite each other, and occupied by the disaster of the arena. First came into the arena a gentleman on horseback, dressed in black, in a picturesque Spanish costume, and advanced toward a balcony where the chief personage was sitting. Taking off his hat he held it forward, and the key of the bull's den was thrown to him by the man in the seats. It missed being caught in the hat, as the horse became restless, being frighten-d at the crowd. Next came the bull-fighters in procession. They were gaily dressed in circus costume of various colors, red, blue, green and purple, their dresses richly spangled. Three were on horseback armed with long lances, the sharp head of which, however, could not penetrate over an inch. The horses were sorry-looking steeds, worth about fifteen dollars each. Better horses are not used because the horse is most exposed to the attack of the bull, as I soon learned. Then the bull was let out of his den into the arena.

He came with a bound, and glared furiously around him. A man on foot attracted his attention by holding his long red cloak in his hand and waving it. The bull made at him. The man dexterously received the blow of the bull's horns upon the cloak, avoiding it himself, and ran for the side of the arena, the bull after him. I thought he would surely be tossed, but he was over the inclosing fence in a twinkling. The scene was intensely exciting. Others now attracted the bull's attention by waving their cloaks. He made at one after another, toss-ng the cloak but missing the man. A horse was brought out and bled in the bull's way. The bull made at him, and received the lance in his shoulder, the horseman trying with all his force to turn the bull aside. This he succeeded in doing, and a little rivulet of blood ran down the bull's side. He made at another horseman, received the point, but spared the horse. A stream of blood issued out of the large round wound in the horse's side; the bull went in another direction, with his horn all bloody, and the horse sank down in the sand and died. Two horses were killed by the first bull. Now a man approached the bull with a barbed arrow in each hand, the arrows gaily adorned with colored paper, and each about two feet and a half long. The bull made at him, but just as he bent his head for the blow, the man drove the arrows into his neck and slipped aside. Merely the barbed points entered the flesh; gaily adorned shafts hung over the bull's side, and he threw himself furiously about to get rid of them, and became wild with pain. Another man with arrows now approached, and succeeded in driving two more into his flesh. When the bull began to show signs of weariness the matador appeared. He carried in one hand a piece of scarlet cloth about a yard square, and in the other a straight sword. He advanced to the side of the arena, made a bow and a little speech to the spectators, then threw his cap toward them, and went to meet the bull.

He attracted the animal's attention by display-ing the scarlet cloth, and kept him in play for some time, avoiding his blows, which were all received upon the scarlet cloth. Finally, as the bull bent his head, the matador drew the sword into his neck up to the hilt. The bull ran with it a minute or two, but at last sank down upon the sand. Another person now appeared, having a short stout dagger in his hand. This he drove into the bull's neck, apparently just where the spine meets the skull. Another door now opened, and three mules, abreast and gaily caparisoned, were driven into the arena; the hand played, a rope was fastened to the bull's horns, and his body was dragged out of the arena at a gallop. The bodies of the two horses followed, every trace of blood was effaced from the sand by the attendants, and the arena was ready for the second bull. Six were slaughtered in this manner, and about ten horses killed. One of the horses received the bull's blood in the belly. We saw a gash about a foot long, the next instant the bowels gushed through and dragged upon the ground, as the poor beast galloped with his rider. The rider felt the stroke in his hind feet, and kicked furiously in his agony, shaking them away from him, and they strewed the ground. He still carried his rider some little distance, but it last fell just before the place where I was sitting.

The sight of the poor creature's dying struggles was not very entertaining, but I had the benefit of it for some time, as he was a long while dying, and was not removed till the bull was killed. The horsemen were several times thrown violently, their horses sometimes falling upon them, but none to appearance were seriously injured, though one came within a hair's breadth of having his brains kicked out by his dying horse. As soon as a horse was disabled, his saddle and bridle were removed by the attendants, and the rider appeared to the arena with a fresh horse. When the spectators wished to express approbation of any particular feat, they threw their hats into the arena, which the person complimented picked up and threw back again.

The sport lasted over two hours, the sun all the while shining brilliantly into the arena and on the spectators, and lighting up the cathedral walls, which were visible over the heads of the spectators on the north side of the amphitheatre; he graceful flying buttresses, the Gothic pinnacles, with the beautiful free work of solid stone, and the ancient Moorish tower, so massive, tall, and rich with barbaric ornament, and the famous giralda, or vane, surmounting it, glowed in the bright sunlight.

One should learn all he can of the peculiarities of the people he travels among, but one bull fight has satisfied my thirst for information in that particular. I don't could never be tempted to attend another. I can say the same of what is called a gipsy dance, which the same guide for information led me to attend last Saturday evening.

The dance began at half-past nine. It took place in a long, narrow room; benches were set along the sides against the wall which were occupied by about fifty people. Some half-dozen English gentlemen and myself were at the upper end of the hall, near the seats of the dancers, who sat beside the spectators and danced on the floor before them. There were six Spanish girls in dancing costume, and about as many men in their outdoor dress, and a gipsy woman in long skirts. The girls and men danced the national dances, the Bolero—the dance of Henry and the dance of Seville—so I was informed. One of the dances was exceedingly coquettish and graceful. It was danced by a man and one of the girls. She did the most bewitching things with her face, making it almost a living expression of feeling and feeling; the expression being handed by Spanish cloak and hat in the most graceful and expressive manner. It was thoroughly national. Another man played the guitar and sang, sometimes by himself, and sometimes as an accompaniment to the dance. He had a loud, clear voice, and a very animated manner. At one time he had the gipsy dance. The gipsy woman danced in a way which was very peculiar, and which I am not able to describe.

This dance is said to be the same with gipsies all over the world. In the midst of it, she gave a handkerchief from her bosom and threw it into the lap of one of the English gentlemen. He inquired of a person sitting next to him what he must do with it, and was informed that he must put a five franc piece in it, if he felt very liberal, or half a dollar, if he did not, and return it to her when she set down. He put in the piece of money and returned the handkerchief as directed. I hope he felt honored by the gipsy's selection of himself, but I was very glad the handkerchief did not come to me, as the old lady who took the money at the door had already made me pay a five franc piece to get in, and I am quite sure no Spanish spectator was obliged to pay as much.

Seville is full of curiosities and attractions. The sight of the cathedral alone has paid me for my visit. I first ascended the tower, which belonged originally to the Moorish mosque, and is over six hundred years old. The work upon it is singularly beautiful. There is something in the Moorish architecture so slight, graceful, even ethereal, that one is fascinated with its strange uses and so enished at its beauty. From the top a extensive view is obtained of the wide and rich valley in which Seville lies. A dim light enters the interior of the cathedral through the beautiful stained-glass windows, and the spectator looks up from the pavement of black and white marble to the lofty grained arches of stone, one hundred and seventy feet above him, supported on Gothic pillars fifty feet thick. The Gothic architecture seems specially appropriate to religious purposes, and to look through the dim aisles of columns, around which fretted vault, to be filled with a lofty sense of grandeur and beauty. There is a fine organ, said to contain fifty hundred pipes, which I heard played in several times to-day in the evening sings. Some fine paintings are shown, a few by Murillo; but the Murillo, the royal palace, called Alcazar, or palace of the Cæsars, the house of Pilate, the government tobacco factory, and the university, I must leave for another letter.

Everett and Choate at the Tomb of Webster.

The following beautiful eulogy upon Mr. Webster appeared in the Boston Courier, prior to the death of Mr. Choate. It was sent to that paper by a correspondent, and we introduce it into our columns that our readers may know what estimate was put on the massive intellect of Mr. Webster, by Rufus Choate and Edward Everett:

Yesterday a select company of Mr. Webster's cordial friends made a pilgrimage to his tomb. Dined and spent the night under the hospitable roof of his son. Among them were his most distinguished eulogists, and still his warmest admirers—Everett and Choate. They were his fast friends while he lived; his sincere mourners since his death. They were Mr. Webster's confidential counselors; men whom he trusted, honored and loved to the last. They appreciated his generous affection, and paid it back with the usury of great hearts. Mr. Webster, in a letter to Mr. Everett, dated July 21, 1822, says:

"We now and then see, stretching across the heavens, a clear, blue, cerulean sky, without cloud, or mist, or haze. And such I prize to be our acquaintance, from the time I heard you, for a week, recite your lessons in the little school house, in Short street, to the date hereof."

To this early and constant friend, Mr. Webster committed, and with unlimited confidence, his works to be edited, and his biography to be written. Mr. Everett's faithful labors added new lustre to this ornament, wide-spread fame. Yesterday, Mr. Everett made a visit to the tomb of his friend. With him came another great-hearted lover of the Marshfield statesman, one whose profound erudition, extensive legal acquirements, and peerless eloquence, often foiled the logical bendings, and broke the iron mail of him whom Choate, himself, declared to stand sessile success, at the summit of the American bar, Mr. Choate seems still to record Mr. Webster as his counselor, guide, and friend. He entertains for him the love of a child and the veneration of a disciple.

The day was delightful. It will receive a white m k in the calendar of every guest. It was passed in wandering over the grounds, in a pleasing interchange of thought, and in dinner, at 4 o'clock, p. m., an elegant dinner, in the old dining-room, where the same friends had so often shared Mr. Webster's hospitality.

After his guests had dined, Mr. Fletcher Webster, in a brief, but very appropriate speech, welcomed his friends to the home of his father, adding: "It was once his—it is now yours." He then proposed Mr. Everett's health, who responded, with touching pathos, expressing great gratitude for this present visit, and s at one desire that it might be annually repeated. He dwelt for a few moments upon the mutual attachment and services and fame. Mr. Fletcher Webster, in reply, speaking of the efficient aid which his father had received from his illustrious coadjutors, very happily alluded to Mr. Choate's residence of the true sources of his greatness. In the first part of Shakspere's Henry VI, Talbot says:

"Shall I live but the shadow of some?
Then are defensative would add to the
For what you see is the smallest part.
And yet see how my life is in it."

He then winds his horn, and his bold soldiers rush in, in crowds. He adds:

"These are my colours, sirrah, wear and stretch,
Shame to your crest."

Mr. Webster, "taught my father say, in presence of these loving friends."

HOSTETTER'S
STOMACH BITTERS.

The proprietors and manufacturers of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS can appeal with perfect confidence to physicians and citizens generally of the United States, because the article has attained a reputation heretofore unknown. A few facts upon this point will speak more powerfully than volumes of mere assertion or Mississippi puffery. The consumption of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters for the last year amounted to over a half million bottles, and from its manifest steady increase at times past, it is evident that during the coming year the consumption will reach near one million bottles. This immense amount could never have been sold but for the rare medicinal qualities of the bitters, and the attention, and the sanction of the most prominent physicians in those sections of the country where the article is best known, who not only prescribe it themselves, but, in their private, they are ready at all times to give testimonials to its efficacy in all cases of stomachic derangements and the diseases resulting therefrom.

This medicine has attained its popularity, although by extraordinary efforts in the way of trumpeting the qualities of the Bitters, but a solid estimation of an invaluable medicine, which is daily gaining ground in the public mind, is its best eulogium.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters have proved a Godsend to regions where fever and ague and various other bilious complaints have counted their victims by hundreds. To be able to state confidently that the "Bitters" are a certain cure for the Dyspepsia and like diseases, is to the proprietors a source of unalloyed pleasure. It removes all doubt that from the stomach, purifies the blood, and imparts renewed vitality to the nervous system, giving it that tone and energy indispensable for the restoration of health. It operates upon the stomach, liver, and other digestive organs, mildly but powerfully, and soon renews them to a condition essential to the healthy discharge of the functions of nature.

Elderly persons may use the Bitters daily as per directions on the bottle, and they will find in it a stimulant peculiarly adapted to comfort declining years, in it is pleasant to the palate, invigorating to the bowels, excellent as a tonic, and rejuvenating generally. We have the evidence of thousands of aged men and women who have experienced the benefits of using this preparation while suffering from stomach derangements and general debility; acting under the advice of physicians, they have abandoned all deleterious drugs and fondly trusted the nerves of this article. A few words to the gentler sex. There are certain periods when their cares are so harassing that many of them sink under the trial. The relation of mother and child is so unerringly tender, that the mother, especially if she be young, is apt to forget her own health in her extreme anxiety for her infant. Should the period of maternity arrive during the summer season, the wear of body and mind is generally aggravated. Here, then, is a necessity for a stimulant to invigorate the morbid nervous system, and enable the mother to bear up under her exhausting trials and responsibilities. Nursing mothers generally prefer the Bitters to all other invigorants that receive the endorsement of physicians, because it is agreeable to the taste as well as certain to give a permanent increase of bodily strength.

All those persons, to whom we have particularly referred above, to wit: sufferers from fever and ague, caused by malaria, diarrhœa, dysentery, indigestion, loss of appetite, and all diseases of derangements of the stomach, supernatural invalids, persons of sedentary occupation, and nursing mothers, will consult their own interests by giving to Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters a trial.

CAUTION.—We caution the public against using any of the many imitations or counterfeits, but ask for Dr. Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters, and see that each bottle has the words "Dr. J. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters" blown on the side of the bottle, and stamped on the metallic cap covering the cork, and observe that our autograph signature is on the label.

Prepared and sold by HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburgh, Pa., and sold by all druggists, grocers, and other generally throughout the United States, South America, and Germany.

HOSTETTER'S
STOMACH BITTERS.

The proprietors and manufacturers of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS can appeal with perfect confidence to physicians and citizens generally of the United States, because the article has attained a reputation heretofore unknown. A few facts upon this point will speak more powerfully than volumes of mere assertion or Mississippi puffery. The consumption of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters for the last year amounted to over a half million bottles, and from its manifest steady increase at times past, it is evident that during the coming year the consumption will reach near one million bottles. This immense amount could never have been sold but for the rare medicinal qualities of the bitters, and the attention, and the sanction of the most prominent physicians in those sections of the country where the article is best known, who not only prescribe it themselves, but, in their private, they are ready at all times to give testimonials to its efficacy in all cases of stomachic derangements and the diseases resulting therefrom.

This medicine has attained its popularity, although by extraordinary efforts in the way of trumpeting the qualities of the Bitters, but a solid estimation of an invaluable medicine, which is daily gaining ground in the public mind, is its best eulogium.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters have proved a Godsend to regions where fever and ague and various other bilious complaints have counted their victims by hundreds. To be able to state confidently that the "Bitters" are a certain cure for the Dyspepsia and like diseases, is to the proprietors a source of unalloyed pleasure. It removes all doubt that from the stomach, purifies the blood, and imparts renewed vitality to the nervous system, giving it that tone and energy indispensable for the restoration of health. It operates upon the stomach, liver, and other digestive organs, mildly but powerfully, and soon renews them to a condition essential to the healthy discharge of the functions of nature.

Elderly persons may use the Bitters daily as per directions on the bottle, and they will find in it a stimulant peculiarly adapted to comfort declining years, in it is pleasant to the palate, invigorating to the bowels, excellent as a tonic, and rejuvenating generally. We have the evidence of thousands of aged men and women who have experienced the benefits of using this preparation while suffering from stomach derangements and general debility; acting under the advice of physicians, they have abandoned all deleterious drugs and fondly trusted the nerves of this article. A few words to the gentler sex. There are certain periods when their cares are so harassing that many of them sink under the trial. The relation of mother and child is so unerringly tender, that the mother, especially if she be young, is apt to forget her own health in her extreme anxiety for her infant. Should the period of maternity arrive during the summer season, the wear of body and mind is generally aggravated. Here, then, is a necessity for a stimulant to invigorate the morbid nervous system, and enable the mother to bear up under her exhausting trials and responsibilities. Nursing mothers generally prefer the Bitters to all other invigorants that receive the endorsement of physicians, because it is agreeable to the taste as well as certain to give a permanent increase of bodily strength.

All those persons, to whom we have particularly referred above, to wit: sufferers from fever and ague, caused by malaria, diarrhœa, dysentery, indigestion, loss of appetite, and all diseases of derangements of the stomach, supernatural invalids, persons of sedentary occupation, and nursing mothers, will consult their own interests by giving to Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters a trial.

CAUTION.—We caution the public against using any of the many imitations or counterfeits, but ask for Dr. Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters, and see that each bottle has the words "Dr. J. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters" blown on the side of the bottle, and stamped on the metallic cap covering the cork, and observe that our autograph signature is on the label.

Prepared and sold by HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburgh, Pa., and sold by all druggists, grocers, and other generally throughout the United States, South America, and Germany.
