STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Reception in Boston—The Welcome of the People—Twenty Thousand Sovereigns Assembled in Hawkins Square.

From the Boston Herald, July 26.

Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, accompanied by his beautiful wife, arrived in our city last evening, by the evening express train from Hartford. He came as a private citizen, for a purpose in no way connected with public matters, and heralded by no sounding note of preparation.

It was plain that every man desired to see Douglas in Massachusetts and in Boston, but the enthusiasm with which he was received, and the zest with which he was cheered and applauded, came like lightning from the clouds, with promise of refreshing showers.

The Democrats of our own and neighboring cities were not backward in doing honor to their beloved and trusted chief. They were prompt to give him a hearty welcome, but the people prepared a triumphal reception.

A committee of the political friends of Judge Douglas, consisting of Messrs. R. C. Bailey, Joseph Smith, Charles Thompson, F. O. Prince and Oliver Stevens, accompanied by Solomon Parsons, of Illinois, Walter Fessenden, R. S. Spofford, and a few others, proceeded to Framingham, yesterday afternoon, and there awaited the arrival of the express train in which Mr. Douglas had taken passage for Boston. While waiting in the midst of a rapidly increasing crowd of the people of the vicinity, Mr. Bailey received a dispatch from Worcester, stating that Douglas left there at twenty-three minutes past three o'clock; that a great crowd received him, more than five thousand people being in the square near the depot, and that a salute of thirty-three guns was fired, while the train stopped ten minutes, giving Mr. Douglas time to make a brief address. The particulars of the ovation at Worcester came to hand more fully afterward. A platform had been erected by the station side, and when the train arrived Mr. Douglas was taken from the car to this conspicuous position, where he found an immense and enthusiastic audience of the men of the commonwealth demanding to see and to hear him. Hon. Isaac Davis made a brief address of welcome, declaring that he would not consume the time which the people desired to have employed by their favorite, to whom he alluded as a son of New England, and a distinguished statesman of the West.

The response whice Mr. Douglas made was necessarily brief but exceedingly happy, and awoke unbounded enthusiasm. He declared that the men of New England were the first to institute self-government, and that was popular sovereignty! There were extremists at the North and extremists at the South who opposed it, but he called upon all to stand by that great principle established in New England. He briefly alluded to the rights of the Sovereign States, in this connection, and said that if he assailed the peculiar institutions of Massachusetts, the people should exercise their right and send him back to Illinois. A national salute, and round after round of cheers rang out in the sky as the train rolled away from Worcester, leaving behind a pleased and delighted but yet an unsatisfied throng.

The train arrived at Framingham promptly, four o'clock, and was received with tumultuous cheers by the large assembly. Nothing but a sight of the face would appease the clamor of the people, and Mr. Douglas stepped out on the platform and walked the length of the train in the midst of the elated multitude. He was then met by the committee; the party immediately stepped aboard, and the train dashed away from the enthusiastic plaudits, with which was mingled the roar of a national salute.

The welcome of the committee was entirely of a private and social nature, and after every member had grasped the hand of Douglas with words of honor and congratulation, other gentlemen were introduced, and the train sped on to Boston.

It was naturally expected that there would be a crowd at the depot, but when the train moved into the depot the roofing and jubilant cheers and the irrepressible tumult gave evidence of the throng in attendance. The building was crowded, and the square in front was filled up and down the street. According to previous arrangement, Mrs. Douglas was taken in charge by Messrs. Prince and Parsons, and driven quietly and rapidly away to the Revere House. The sight of the great statesman set the crowd a-fire, and it surged to and fro in vain endeavor to catch a better view of him. Leaning upon the arm of Mr. E. C. Bailey and Oliver Stevens, with the remaining members of the committee in close proximity, and the small party guarded as effectually as possible by the police, the jubilant visitor was taken through the excited throng and handed into a splendid open barouche, drawn by four horses, which stood in front of the station. Here he was elevated into full view of the people, and they gave ample expression of their admiration of his character in cheers renewed and continuous. In the barouche with him were Messrs. E. C. Bailey, Joseph Smith and Oliver Stevens. In other carriages were Messrs. Isaac Davis, Peter T. Homer, Levi Parker, Nathan Washburn, and Joseph E. Easterbrook, who had come through from Worcester, and Walter Fessenden, R. S. Spofford, and Charles Thompson, of the party who went out from Boston.

The carriages, with others, occupied by prominent Democrats of this city, moved through the dense mass of humanity through Beach, Washington, and Court streets, to the Revere House. The crowd was crushed in every part; business was for a time suspended, and every door and window was crowded with eager faces, while continual cheering rent the air. No man ever attracted so much attention, or received so many enthusiastic plaudits in the streets of Boston. The people were packed densely in the carriage way, so that the procession was slow, and thousands and tens of thousands of our citizens were gratified with a good view of the great statesman as he bowed to right and to left, raising his hat in the Bowdoin square he presented to the cortège a sea of faces. Nothing but this old phrase can so well express the fact, as the barouche drew up at the door step, covered with a jostling, cheering throng, the enthusiasm of the multitude seemed to rise to its highest heat.

Deeply impressed with a reception so unprecedented and unsought, Mr. Douglas was borne into the barouche, and in a few words expressed the deep emotions which were called from his heart as follows:

Fellow-citizens of Massachusetts: I arise for the purpose of expressing my profound acknowledgements for this, your kind reception. [Applause.] It seems as though my entire trip through Massachusetts had been one continuous ovation. [Great applause and cheers.] And having a Yankee heart in my own breast, I know how to appreciate it. [Tumultuous applause.] I must say to you that I have been profoundly impressed with this testimonial, and I am rejoiced to believe that it is a manifestation of a deep and abiding faith in those great political principles to which my life is devoted.

Great applause and continued cheering followed this brief speech, while Mr. Douglas was conducted away to a room in the hotel prepared for him, where for a time he was allowed to enjoy the repose made welcome by the severe labors of the day.

THE ORATION AT THE REVERE.

It had been arranged by the political friends of Mr. Douglas to give him a serenade at his hotel in the evening, and by seven o'clock, people began to crowd into Bowdoin square and take positions for the evening. About eight o'clock Mr. Douglas came down into the south drawing-room, introduced the members of the committee, and there received, for nearly an hour, the hands and congratulations of a countless stream of people which poured through the hall and passageway to make room for the press behind. Thousands more would have gladly availed themselves of this privilege, but an impatient crowd outside, which completely filled the square, and extended far out into Court, Cambridge, Bulfinch, Green, and Chardon streets, were calling upon the statesman to show himself in his room open on the forum. He retired for a brief time to his room, and the enthusiasm outside was continually increasing. The brigade band appeared upon the scene, and rolling through the multitude to the stand for the speaker's balcony, where it discoursed national, spirit-stirring airs to an audience within and without capable of appreciating and responding to them. An immense delegation from Charlestown, bearing a transparency with the motto of "Douglas and Victory," and with music and colors, came into the square and crowded up to give the orator, perchance, a thrill of the spirit which Bunker Hill perpetuates. A display of joyful fires and a flight of rockets added luster to the field of fires turned expectantly upward.

Shortly before 9 o'clock, Mr. Douglas appeared at the balcony window, which faces the street direct from the west wing of the house. The enthusiasm deepened into an uproar which could not be stilled except by the voice of Douglas. Never in the proudest days of that proud name in the chivalric South did the people cry more anxiously, more hopefully, "A Douglas! A Douglas!"

Oliver Stevens, who performed the duty of introducing Mr. Douglas to his audience who scarcely needed an introduction, stepped out on the balcony to address the assembly, but his voice was scarcely heard in the tumult of enthusiasm which was raised by the sight of, and expressed in the loud cries for "Douglas! Douglas! Douglas!" While he was sitting in their view, they would know no other name but his.

SPEECH OF MR. DOUGLAS.

At the close of the introduction, Mr. Douglas arose, and a gleam of transient light revealed him to the crowd. A simultaneous burst of applause hailed him as he stood, but when his deep powerful voice went up to the first tone, every other voice was hushed, the uproar of the throng was changed in a twinkling into a breathless silence. Mr. Douglas spoke as follows:

FELLOW CITIZENS OF MASSACHUSETTS: This vast sea of human faces warns me that it is impossible for any human voice to make itself heard through the extent of this great assembly. I am overwhelmed by this spontaneous assembly of countless thousands, to pay homage, not to me individually, but to that great principle of constitutional liberty and self-government which underlies all our free institutions. [Applause.]

I am informed that I have the honor of speaking from the same balcony from which your fellow Worcester in 1850 [applause] defended his action in support of the principle of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in the Territories, as proposed in the legislation of that year. The knowledge of the fact that I speak from the same balcony in defence of the same principles that the great Massachusetts statesman vindicated as the crowning act of his life, is sufficient to account for this unprecedented assemblage of the national men of Massachusetts. [Applause.]

The history of Massachusetts is the history of constitutional liberty. In Massachusetts the free institutions had their birth. The battles of the revolution were all fought in defense of the rights of the people, in Territories as well as in the sovereign States, to manage their own affairs and establish their own institutions. It is natural, therefore, that the people of New England, the descendants of those revolutionary sires and patriots who established our free system of government, should stand firm in defense of the principle on which our entire political system rests. [Applause.]

The liberties of this country are now put in peril by sectional parties, appealing to sectional prejudices, vanity and ambition, against the peace and harmony of the whole country. On the one hand you find a great northern sectional party, appealing to the prejudices of the North against the South. On the other hand you find a sectional party in the South, appealing to the prejudices of the South against the North. The Republican party demands the possession of the Federal Government in order to use its whole power to repeal slavery where the people want it. And the sectional party of the South demand possession of the Government that the whole power of the Government may be wielded for the defense and maintenance of slavery where the people don't want it. [Applause.]

These two sectional parties are in direct conflict with each other, and are producing that "irrepressible conflict" which can never be reconciled until you return to the doctrine that Congress shall not interfere with the domestic institutions of the people anywhere. [Applause.] For the last few years the whole time of Congress has been employed in the discussion of the slavery question, in the discussion of the important business interests affecting the whole country. [Cries, "that's so."]

Whenever you ask your Representatives why it was they didn't revise the revenue system in order to be able to defray the expenses of the Government, without borrowing twenty million dollars a year, they tell you they hadn't time. The whole time was occupied with the discussion of slavery, and there was no time to raise money to pay our honest debts. When you ask your Representatives why it is that the Pacific railroad has not been made, you are told there was not time; for the slavery question absorbed it all. When you ask your Representatives why the mail system was not perfected, you are told that the bill was lost for the want of time. When you see that the overland mail routes are not provided for, you are told that it is because of the want of time.

Thus you find that all the great measures which affect the commercial, the manufacturing, and the industrial interests of the whole country are lost for the want of time!

My fellow-citizens, there never will be time to perform the duties for which the Government is established, and which all to which it belongs, so long as the slavery question from the halls of Congress, and remand it to the people of each State and Territory, according to the platform of the Democratic party of 1856 and 1857.

This great principle of non-intervention is not peculiar to the Democratic party. It was affirmed in the compromise measures of 1850; it was affirmed in the whig party of 1852, as well as in the Democratic party. It was affirmed by all national men in those days, and should be sustained by all national, conservative, Union-loving men in the present day.

My fellow-citizens, I return to you my profound acknowledgments for the kindness which has assembled you together, and for the respectful attention with which this vast assemblage has listened to my desultory remarks. Renewing my thanks, I have to take my leave of you, and bid you good night. [Great and prolonged cheering, in the midst of which Mr. Douglas retired.]

Hon. E. E. Stuart, Democratic nominee for Governor of Ohio, was then called out and made an effective speech.

The audience was still sufficient to crowd all parts of the square, and loud calls were made for the "Little Giant," and Mr. E. C. Bailey briefly and effectively addressed the assembly. He alluded to the unprecedented reception which the people had given to their chosen man, and to the enthusiasm which it had awoke wherever it was heard. Appealing to the position of their candidate, he bespoke for him such an upheaving of the masses as would carry him a little triumphant march into the highest honors of the people's gift.

In closing, he introduced Mr. E. A. Alger, of Lowell, who made some interesting remarks.

The surging crowd were yet unsatisfied, and would not be satisfied until they had seen their favorite again. Mr. Douglas gave heed to the earnest expression of such a number of his fellow-citizens, and appeared again at the window. He also spoke briefly, declaring that he had been made of the coldness and formality of the people of New England, but what he had seen gave evidence of warm hearts, abounding with patriotic and kindly emotions.

Then, and then only, the crowd dispersed with cheers which spoke well the weekin.

Mr. Douglas will spend to-day in Cambridge, where he will be met by invitation of the Faculty of Harvard College, and of the State Government. He will be accompanied by the committee of reception, and escorted by the National Lancers. He will spend the whole day in the classic shades of Harvard.

Decorations were exhibited last evening at the store of S. F. Edmunds, on court street, and at No. 1 Chardon street, and from the latter place a good display of fireworks was made in honor of Douglas.

Movements of Senator Douglas—His Speech at Saratoga Springs.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I am truly grateful for the kind sentiments you have expressed, and the cordial welcome you have extended to me. Your kindness is gratifying to me, as it would be to any man, but it is not the pleasure of the social character of the introduction of partisan politics. You have been so kind as to propose to me the regular Democratic candidate for the presidency, and to speak in terms of eulogy of my public services. I hope you will accept my sincere thanks. While I will never conceal an opinion on public questions, and on all proper occasions freely avow and boldly maintain the rights of my fellow-citizens, I shall never be so express myself as to be entirely respectful to those who may differ with me on many points. I believe in the equality of the States and in the equal rights of all the citizens of the States in the Territories of the United States. Whatever rights the citizens of any State may enjoy in the Territories, pertain alike to the citizens of all the States, and whatever rights the citizens of any State may move into the Territories with their property, the citizen of every other State may go and carry his property into the Territories for protection. Upon this of the law. But it must be borne in mind that all property in the Territories is subject to and dependent on the local law for protection.

Congress never yet passed a law for the protection of property of any kind in any organized Territory. Congress never passed a criminal code for the Territories. Persons and property of every description are dependent upon local law for protection. No exception to this general rule exists either in regard to persons or property. Black or white, free or slave, all persons are under the protection of the local law, and not the acts of Congress for protection. Nor is there any exception in respect to different kinds of property. Property in slaves stands on the same footing as other property, and that will secure the cash on all freights delivered on our hands.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

KEEP on hand a well-assorted stock of FLOUR, and are constantly supplied with CORN, OATS, HAY, BRAN, etc., which they will sell at the lowest market prices.

Having good facilities for the purchase of stock, and a determination not to be undersold in our articles of trade by any legitimate dealer in this city, we hope to merit attention to our stock, and solicit a share of public patronage. [ap11-1y] LINDSEY & FICKLEN.

GARDENERS.

AND THOSE DESIRING A BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE LOT IN THE SOUTH, ATTENTION!

IF there two gentlemen who called at our office a few days since, in search of a small place in the vicinity of the city for a market garden, will call again, we think we can show them an opportunity for purchasing six or fifteen acres of land, such as soldiers offer.

We have for sale on the Hernando plank road, near the State Female College, and in the best neighborhood in the vicinity of Memphis, fifteen acres of very superior land, on which there are some eleven building spots, which we will sell at a month long price than any other property in its vicinity can be had for.

We mean exactly what we say, and will prove our assertion to any one who will call on us at our office, No. 275 Main street, over S. B. Wilkinson's, near the corner of Madison street.

NO CLASPS. NO CLASPS

DR. Wm. W. MORGAN,

SURGEON DENTIST,

OF PHILADELPHIA,

HAS permanently located in MEMPHIS. Prepared to perform ALL DENTAL operations in a satisfactory manner. His PRICES are as LOW as the LOWEST, for the same style, execution and material. Some persons have heard Dr. M. abominated the use of CLASPS altogether, in consequence of their destructive injury upon the teeth; he would feel in duty bound to advise of the misery, the positive ruin to health, or the speedy and total loss to the enamel of all teeth subjected to the action of the powerful and ever-ACCUMULATING PRESSURE, by which means he is enabled to insert from a SINGLE TOOTH to an entire set with the most perfect satisfaction, using as a base AMBER, Vulcanite, Chorality, Porcelain, improved Chrysolite, Aluminum, Platinum, Silver and Gold. He also puts up a new and beautiful style of CONTINUOUS GUM TEETH. Uses no mercurial preparations for filling decayed teeth, among which is his celebrated PEARL FILLING, so favorably noticed by the public journals in 1858, in color it resembles natural Teeth. ☞ Obturators for CLEFT PALATE inserted. ☞ All

Warranted with nicest skill and art,
And superbly finished in every part.

Mesmerism will be administered when desired.

Teeth extracted without pain, by the influence of Chloroform, Ether, etc., if desired. ☞ Specimens of all the different styles of artificial dentures known to the profession, can be seen at his office.
