THE MEMPHIS DAILY APPEAL.

BY M'CLANAHAN & DILL. MEMPHIS, FRIDAY, AUGUST 24, 1860. VOLUME XI.—NUMBER 199.

Daily Appeal.

MR. CRITTENDEN'S OPINION OF THREE CANDIDATES FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

LINCOLN, DOUGLAS AND BRECKINRIDGE.

Mr. Crittenden made a speech at Mozart hall, Louisville, on the 2d inst. Of course it was in favor of Bell and Everett, but in urging them as candidates entitled to the support of the Union party, he flashed in sketch the chances of the other nominees for the presidency. We find room only for this part of his speech:

Mr. Lincoln may be a very worthy, upright and honest man. He married a Kentucky girl, and that is a wholesome influence. [Applause and laughter.] I am told he is a Kentuckian himself, which is another salutary fact. Mr. Lincoln may be a very honest, worthy man, but, in a political point of view, he must be regarded as the representative of the party that has made him its leader. He is the Republican leader, and like all political leaders, he must obey the party that brought him into existence, or be put down or cast out by it. He must be governed by the political influence and voice of his party. Mr. Lincoln is at the head of the great anti-slavery party, a purely sectional party, which, according to all its antecedents, threatens the existence of slavery everywhere; and the apprehension which his threat excites is increased by the fact that although the leaders and wise men of that party may not proclaim such sentiments, there are enough among them in their camp who hold and proclaim such abolition doctrines as must make every man South feel uneasy in his condition and in his property.

The mere fact of Mr. Lincoln's election would be, therefore, a great calamity to the country, though he never should do an act you justly object to or have cause to be afraid of the country. His election would create and continue an alarm that would keep the country agitated and unhappy, if not create an apprehension and resistance to the government itself. It is greatly to be desired that he should not be elected. It is hardly necessary to say that we should be forced to apprehend from Mr. Lincoln's election that the impulse which the anti-slavery feeling would receive therefrom would go further than it has yet gone, and create a still greater danger to the peace and security of the South. This prevailing apprehension would necessarily make his election a great calamity. It therefore enters into no competition with the election of Messrs. Bell and Everett, as a means of preference. From them there is nothing to be look-d for but peace and security, with all the sanction that a manly, brave and determined administration can give them. [Applause.]

Mr. Douglas and his party come next. You all know, as well as I do, of the rupture that has taken place in the Democratic party, and the two conventions that have met for the purpose of nominating candidates for the presidency. Divided—one party seceded—Mr. Douglas numerous adherents assembled and nominated him, and the seceders went to a neighboring house and made a nomination. That nomination fell upon a citizen of our own State—Mr. John C. Breckinridge.

Now, what is to be apprehended from Mr. Douglas, if he is elected President? Would not the Breckinridge men continue to make war upon him? Would not the Republicans continue to make war upon him, and irritated by a common defeat, would they not be apt to form an alliance against the successful rival who had succeeded into the Presidency? Mr. Douglas would be in a very difficult situation in administering the Government without the support and assistance necessary to the task. I know Mr. Douglas very well, and gentlemen. From Mr. Douglas personally, I should apprehend no danger. I have never been a friend of Mr. Douglas. [Applause.] A frank, fair, and honest opponent of the Democratic party, I have ever been found acting upon what principles, from the first to the last. [Applause.]

But I have known Mr. Douglas in the public economy, and have acted with him. Although generally opposed, and especially upon party questions, we have at times acted together, and particularly upon some memorable occasion, when we acted together in opposition to that infamous Lecompton Constitution. [Deafening applause.] Mr. Douglas, I believe making a great sacrifice to his sense of duty. [Applause.] He was sacrificing his connection, on that occasion, with many distinguished friends, as he and they thought, in the interests of a new political life; he was sacrificing flattering prospects for the highest office of the Government in his own party, the country had, I fully believe, that what he conceived to be his duty; and in defiance of all opposition, the rack of the President, of feared friends, and apparent fees, he stood like a man. [Tremendous cheering.] He might have been mistaken in what he did, but that will diminish the value of the act. He thought he was right. And he knew he was making a sacrifice, and he was capable of making it, when he believed the interests of his country demanded it. [Cheers.] I believe so yet, and I stand with him; he is a Union man. [Cheers.] And a Union man I can always trust, when I believe him to be sincere and in earnest, as I believe Douglas to be. [Cheers.]

But still, this is not the question. Mr. Douglas represents an old party, at fault, in the first instance, with the Republican party, calling forth its bitterest opposition, and now at feud with the southern wing of his own party, that has rejected him for another. He would be an administration of continual party strife. The country could hope for no reformation, no peace and good government, if he therefore ought not to be preferred, in my judement, to Bell and Everett. [Cheers.] I have spoken not to complimentary to Mr. Douglas, but I have spoken because I desire to give my testimony to his truth. I believe Mr. Douglas to be a patriot, and I know him to be a Union man by all the evidences that could induce me to venture her of his sentiments. [Applause.] He is a generous, bold man, speaking what he thinks, and doing what he knows to be right. [Repeated applause.] But I am opposed to Mr. Douglas. I am for Bell and Everett. [Immense applause.]

We are now left only to compare Mr. Bell with the third candidate who stands in opposition—Mr. Breckinridge. And here, again, as in respect to Mr. Douglas, my objection is not to the candidate as an individual I should hope Mr. Breckinridge is not a disunionist. [A voice—Yes, he is.] He ought not to be. He belongs to a tribe of faithful, devoted Union men—the tribe of Kentuckians. [Great applause.] He must have been endowed with from the pots of his duty, far from the path in which all the impulses of his blood ought to carry him, if he should be a disunionist. But Mr. Breckinridge has made himself the head of a party. He is part and parcel of the present purposes of that party; and, as in the case of Mr. Douglas, I must judge of the public course by the party he consents to represent.

Who are they? There is one division south of Mason and Dixon's line that I know of—they call themselves the South party. [Applause.] We have long heard multitudinous of disunion in the South—more than the whispering of the wind. Threats have been often then uttered and by high men in high places. We have even conventions assembled for the purpose of promoting the cause of disunion. We have seen the flag of disunion displayed and the name of nullification—the State claims the right to annul the laws passed by the whole people of the United States, to annul acts of Congress—we have seen all this we have seen it organized into form and Gentlemen, our face and together, one presents an aspect, by the act of their men, by conventions assembled for the purpose, by open resolutions carried on between the States, and by public declarations that the movement was postponed because not enough States in the South could be got to join the enterprise to make it successful. We have seen all these evidences of a spirit of disunion. It is not material to say one from what cause this spirit has sprung; but be it for a single moment and I ask the question, What cause for a dissolution of the Union? What harm has the Union done? Wrongs may have been done individuals, may have received wrong by subject legislation upon the part of Congress. Our great men may not have had their fair share of public honors from the hands of the Presidents. They may have received wrongs of this sort, but is the Union the author of such wrongs? What is the remedy which must be sought? It is to turn out of state places and to the power constitutional mode those who have mis-administered the Government. The Government has done no wrong. The Constitution and the Union have done no wrong. They cannot and ought not to be done to every man, and every State, and every section. Their agents may have disobeyed their injunctions, and everything may have been done wrong through individuals, but individuals are amenable. What remedy would the destruction of the Constitution afford? Could they get out of the rules injustice for the wrongs on account of which they would tear it down? Could it give any satisfaction? Could it make any atonement? No. And yet by some strange perversion of reason their minds have been brought to look upon disunion as a remedy for political wrongs. It has caused some of them; the destruction of it would be a great calamity, and the greatest of all evils to the people of the United States.

Others have taken a different view of it. They look with dissatisfaction toward the Union and especially toward it. The ultra Southern States participate in this feeling, and Senators in Congress, men, I know, of character and reputation, express the same fatal cause. This is the party of which we may on certain apprehensions that it will effect the dismemberment of the government. Many of its members are noble spirited gentlemen. It is only upon the one subject they have been misled, or have misled themselves. They have been betrayed into this delusion. In all other respects they are great and noble of heart character, but the spirit of disunion prevails among them, and it is only the more dangerous when entertained by such men. They openly talk about it, they write about it they invite it. They have rocked themselves into the belief that the government must be dissolved. They want to meet the inevitable necessity at once; they want to dissolve the Union immediately, to precipitate the people into it. The president is to be overthrown in the by-and-by.

The leaders anticipate great success on the part of the Republicans, and want now to effect a revolution in the cotton States, and establish a new government. These sentiments pervade the South, and make up the body and soul of the party which has nominated our fellow-citizen, Mr. Breckinridge, as its candidate for the presidency. In the name of God that by electing him you would give new energy to that destructive impulse, and new power to this disunion sentiment, and to the cause of disunion? Mr. Breckinridge himself follows the leaders. He is part and parcel of the great party. You see this by his nomination as a compromise of it, and can have former with the disasters that would follow if its success. Possibly it may be the policy of those who nominated him to unite old Kentucky to this new confederacy. Old Kentucky is quite an important State in the Union. [Applause.] She is in the heart of it—she is the heart of it. [Immense enthusiasm.] To obtain her concurrence is of the greatest possible con sequence to those who fancy that they can make a Republic in the South more glorious and more prosperous than the great Republic of which we now form a part.

Such have been their ideas for a long time. Kentucky and Tennessee, which old General Gaines called the two military States of the Union, have lain in the way of that sort of treachery to the Union. [Long and loud applause.] They are too patriotic to easily overcome, and though I would not wish to diminish the honor of Mr. Breckinridge's nomination, as he himself conceives it, yet I imagine there are thousands in the South who would go for Mr. Breckinridge easily in the hope that it might be the means of annexing Kentucky as a sort of frontier province to this Southern Republic of cotton States that is to be made. [Cheers and laughter.] If they can bribe about that union, if they can bring over old Kentucky, and make her an ally of the scheme for the disintegration of the Confederacy, it is the honor of Mr. Breckinridge's nomination, as he himself conceives it, yet I imagine there are thousands in the South who would go for Mr. Breckinridge easily in the hope that it might be the means of annexing Kentucky as a sort of frontier province to this Southern Republic of cotton States that is to be made. [Cheers and laughter.] If they can bribe about that union, if they can bring over old Kentucky, and make her an ally of the scheme for the disintegration of the Confederacy, it is the honor of Mr. Breckinridge's nomination, and he himself conceives it, yet I imagine there are thousands in the South who would go for Mr. Breckinridge easily in the hope that it might be the means of annexing Kentucky as a sort of frontier province to this Southern Republic of cotton States that is to be made. [Cheers and laughter.] I am told he is a Kentuckian himself, which is another salutary fact. Mr. Lincoln may be a very honest, worthy man, but, in a political point of view, he must be regarded as the representative of the party that has made him its leader. He is the Republican leader, and like all political leaders, he must obey the party that brought him into existence, or be put down or cast out by it. He must be governed by the political influence and voice of his party. Mr. Lincoln is at the head of the great anti-slavery party, a purely sectional party, which, according to all its antecedents, threatens the existence of slavery everywhere; and the apprehension which his threat excites is increased by the fact that although the leaders and wise men of that party may not proclaim such sentiments, there are enough among them in their camp who hold and proclaim such abolition doctrines as must make every man South feel uneasy in his condition and in his property.

The mere fact of Mr. Lincoln's election would be, therefore, a great calamity to the country, though he never should do an act you justly object to or have cause to be afraid of the country. His election would create and continue an alarm that would keep the country agitated and unhappy, if not create an apprehension and resistance to the government itself. It is greatly to be desired that he should not be elected. It is hardly necessary to say that we should be forced to apprehend from Mr. Lincoln's election that the impulse which the anti-slavery feeling would receive therefrom would go further than it has yet gone, and create a still greater danger to the peace and security of the South. This prevailing apprehension would necessarily make his election a great calamity. It therefore enters into no competition with the election of Messrs. Bell and Everett, as a means of preference. From them there is nothing to be look-d for but peace and security, with all the sanction that a manly, brave and determined administration can give them. [Applause.]

Mr. Douglas and his party come next. You all know, as well as I do, of the rupture that has taken place in the Democratic party, and the two conventions that have met for the purpose of nominating candidates for the presidency. Divided—one party seceded—Mr. Douglas numerous adherents assembled and nominated him, and the seceders went to a neighboring house and made a nomination. That nomination fell upon a citizen of our own State—Mr. John C. Breckinridge.

Now, what is to be apprehended from Mr. Douglas, if he is elected President? Would not the Breckinridge men continue to make war upon him? Would not the Republicans continue to make war upon him, and irritated by a common defeat, would they not be apt to form an alliance against the successful rival who had succeeded into the Presidency? Mr. Douglas would be in a very difficult situation in administering the Government without the support and assistance necessary to the task. I know Mr. Douglas very well, and gentlemen. From Mr. Douglas personally, I should apprehend no danger. I have never been a friend of Mr. Douglas. [Applause.] A frank, fair, and honest opponent of the Democratic party, I have ever been found acting upon what principles, from the first to the last. [Applause.]

But I have known Mr. Douglas in the public economy, and have acted with him. Although generally opposed, and especially upon party questions, we have at times acted together, and particularly upon some memorable occasion, when we acted together in opposition to that infamous Lecompton Constitution. [Deafening applause.] Mr. Douglas, I believe making a great sacrifice to his sense of duty. [Applause.] He was sacrificing his connection, on that occasion, with many distinguished friends, as he and they thought, in the interests of a new political life; he was sacrificing flattering prospects for the highest office of the Government in his own party, the country had, I fully believe, that what he conceived to be his duty; and in defiance of all opposition, the rack of the President, of feared friends, and apparent fees, he stood like a man. [Tremendous cheering.] He might have been mistaken in what he did, but that will diminish the value of the act. He thought he was right. And he knew he was making a sacrifice, and he was capable of making it, when he believed the interests of his country demanded it. [Cheers.] I believe so yet, and I stand with him; he is a Union man. [Cheers.] And a Union man I can always trust, when I believe him to be sincere and in earnest, as I believe Douglas to be. [Cheers.]

But still, this is not the question. Mr. Douglas represents an old party, at fault, in the first instance, with the Republican party, calling forth its bitterest opposition, and now at feud with the southern wing of his own party, that has rejected him for another. He would be an administration of continual party strife. The country could hope for no reformation, no peace and good government, if he therefore ought not to be preferred, in my judement, to Bell and Everett. [Cheers.] I have spoken not to complimentary to Mr. Douglas, but I have spoken because I desire to give my testimony to his truth. I believe Mr. Douglas to be a patriot, and I know him to be a Union man by all the evidences that could induce me to venture her of his sentiments. [Applause.] He is a generous, bold man, speaking what he thinks, and doing what he knows to be right. [Repeated applause.] But I am opposed to Mr. Douglas. I am for Bell and Everett. [Immense applause.]

We are now left only to compare Mr. Bell with the third candidate who stands in opposition—Mr. Breckinridge. And here, again, as in respect to Mr. Douglas, my objection is not to the candidate as an individual I should hope Mr. Breckinridge is not a disunionist. [A voice—Yes, he is.] He ought not to be. He belongs to a tribe of faithful, devoted Union men—the tribe of Kentuckians. [Great applause.] He must have been endowed with from the pots of his duty, far from the path in which all the impulses of his blood ought to carry him, if he should be a disunionist. But Mr. Breckinridge has made himself the head of a party. He is part and parcel of the present purposes of that party; and, as in the case of Mr. Douglas, I must judge of the public course by the party he consents to represent.

Who are they? There is one division south of Mason and Dixon's line that I know of—they call themselves the South party. [Applause.] We have long heard multitudinous of disunion in the South—more than the whispering of the wind. Threats have been often then uttered and by high men in high places. We have even conventions assembled for the purpose of promoting the cause of disunion. We have seen the flag of disunion displayed and the name of nullification—the State claims the right to annul the laws passed by the whole people of the United States, to annul acts of Congress—we have seen all this we have seen it organized into form and together form, one face and together, one presents an aspect, by the act of their men, by conventions assembled for the purpose, by open resolutions carried on between the States, and by public declarations that the movement was postponed because not enough States in the South could be got to join the enterprise to make it successful. We have seen all these evidences of a spirit of disunion. It is not material to say one from what cause this spirit has sprung; but be it for a single moment and ask the question, What cause for a dissolution of the Union? What harm has the Union done? Wrongs may have been done individuals, may have received wrong by subject legislation upon the part of Congress. Our great men may not have had their fair share of public honors from the hands of the Presidents. They may have received wrongs of this sort, but is the Union the author of such wrongs? What is the remedy which must be sought? It is to turn out of state places and to the power constitutional mode those who have mis-administered the Government. The Government has done no wrong. The Constitution and the Union have done no wrong. They cannot and ought not to be to be done to every man, and every State, and every section. Their agents may have disobeyed their injunctions, and everything may have been done wrong through individuals, but individuals are amenable. What remedy would the destruction of the Constitution afford? Could they get out of the rules injustice for the wrongs on account of which they would tear it down? Could it give any satisfaction? Could it make any atonement? No. And yet by some strange perversion of reason their minds have been brought to look upon disunion as a remedy for political wrongs. It has caused some of them; the destruction of it would be a great calamity, and the greatest of all evils to the people of the United States.

Others have taken a different view of it. They look with dissatisfaction toward the Union and especially toward it. The ultra Southern States participate in this feeling, and Senators in Congress, men, I know, of character and reputation, express the same fatal cause. This is the party of which we may on certain apprehensions that it will effect the dismemberment of the government. Many of its members are noble spirited gentlemen. It is only upon the one subject they have been misled, or have misled themselves. They have been betrayed into this delusion. In all other respects they are great and noble of heart character, but the spirit of disunion prevails among them, and it is only the more dangerous when entertained by such men. They openly talk about it, they write about it they invite it. They have rocked themselves into the belief that the government must be dissolved. They want to meet the inevitable necessity at once; they want to dissolve the Union immediately, to precipitate the people into it. The president is to be overthrown in the by-and-by.

The leaders anticipate great success on the part of the Republicans, and want now to effect a revolution in the cotton States, and establish a new government. These sentiments pervade the South, and make up the body and soul of the party which has nominated our fellow-citizen, Mr. Breckinridge, as its candidate for the presidency. In the name of God that by electing him you would give new energy to that destructive impulse, and new power to this disunion sentiment, and to the cause of disunion? Mr. Breckinridge himself follows the leaders. He is part and parcel of the great party. You see this by his nomination as a compromise of it, and can have former with the disasters that would follow if its success. Possibly it may be the policy of those who nominated him to unite old Kentucky to this new confederacy. Old Kentucky is quite an important State in the Union. [Applause.] She is in the heart of it—she is the heart of it. [Immense enthusiasm.] To obtain her concurrence is of the greatest possible con sequence to those who fancy that they can make a Republic in the South more glorious and more prosperous than the great Republic of which we now form a part.

Such have been their ideas for a long time. Kentucky and Tennessee, which old General Gaines called the two military States of the Union, have lain in the way of that sort of treachery to the Union. [Long and loud applause.] They are too patriotic to easily overcome, and though I would not wish to diminish the honor of Mr. Breckinridge's nomination, as he himself conceives it, yet I imagine there are thousands in the South who would go for Mr. Breckinridge easily in the hope that it might be the means of annexing Kentucky as a sort of frontier province to this Southern Republic of cotton States that is to be made. [Cheers and laughter.] If they can bribe about that union, if they can bring over old Kentucky, and make her an ally of the scheme for the disintegration of the Confederacy, it is the honor of Mr. Breckinridge's nomination, and he himself conceives it, yet I imagine there are thousands in the South who would go for Mr. Breckinridge easily in the hope that it might be the means of annexing Kentucky as a sort of frontier province to this Southern Republic of cotton States that is to be made. [Cheers and laughter.] I am told he is a Kentuckian himself, which is another salutary fact. Mr. Lincoln may be a very honest, worthy man, but, in a political point of view, he must be regarded as the representative of the party that has made him its leader. He is the Republican leader, and like all political leaders, he must obey the party that brought him into existence, or be put down or cast out by it. He must be governed by the political influence and voice of his party. Mr. Lincoln is at the head of the great anti-slavery party, a purely sectional party, which, according to all its antecedents, threatens the existence of slavery everywhere; and the apprehension which his threat excites is increased by the fact that although the leaders and wise men of that party may not proclaim such sentiments, there are enough among them in their camp who hold and proclaim such abolition doctrines as must make every man South feel uneasy in his condition and in his property.

The mere fact of Mr. Lincoln's election would be, therefore, a great calamity to the country, though he never should do an act you justly object to or have cause to be afraid of the country. His election would create and continue an alarm that would keep the country agitated and unhappy, if not create an apprehension and resistance to the government itself. It is greatly to be desired that he should not be elected. It is hardly necessary to say that we should be forced to apprehend from Mr. Lincoln's election that the impulse which the anti-slavery feeling would receive therefrom would go further than it has yet gone, and create a still greater danger to the peace and security of the South. This prevailing apprehension would necessarily make his election a great calamity. It therefore enters into no competition with the election of Messrs. Bell and Everett, as a means of preference. From them there is nothing to be look-d for but peace and security, with all the sanction that a manly, brave and determined administration can give them. [Applause.]

Mr. Douglas and his party come next. You all know, as well as I do, of the rupture that has taken place in the Democratic party, and the two conventions that have met for the purpose of nominating candidates for the presidency. Divided—one party seceded—Mr. Douglas numerous adherents assembled and nominated him, and the seceders went to a neighboring house and made a nomination. That nomination fell upon a citizen of our own State—Mr. John C. Breckinridge.

Now, what is to be apprehended from Mr. Douglas, if he is elected President? Would not the Breckinridge men continue to make war upon him? Would not the Republicans continue to make war upon him, and irritated by a common defeat, would they not be apt to form an alliance against the successful rival who had succeeded into the Presidency? Mr. Douglas would be in a very difficult situation in administering the Government without the support and assistance necessary to the task. I know Mr. Douglas very well, and gentlemen. From Mr. Douglas personally, I should apprehend no danger. I have never been a friend of Mr. Douglas. [Applause.] A frank, fair, and honest opponent of the Democratic party, I have ever been found acting upon what principles, from the first to the last. [Applause.]

But I have known Mr. Douglas in the public economy, and have acted with him. Although generally opposed, and especially upon party questions, we have at times acted together, and particularly upon some memorable occasion, when we acted together in opposition to that infamous Lecompton Constitution. [Deafening applause.] Mr. Douglas, I believe making a great sacrifice to his sense of duty. [Applause.] He was sacrificing his connection, on that occasion, with many distinguished friends, as he and they thought, in the interests of a new political life; he was sacrificing flattering prospects for the highest office of the Government in his own party, the country had, I fully believe, that what he conceived to be his duty; and in defiance of all opposition, the rack of the President, of feared friends, and apparent fees, he stood like a man. [Tremendous cheering.] He might have been mistaken in what he did, but that will diminish the value of the act. He thought he was right. And he knew he was making a sacrifice, and he was capable of making it, when he believed the interests of his country demanded it. [Cheers.] I believe so yet, and I stand with him; he is a Union man. [Cheers.] And a Union man I can always trust, when I believe him to be sincere and in earnest, as I believe Douglas to be. [Cheers.]

But still, this is not the question. Mr. Douglas represents an old party, at fault, in the first instance, with the Republican party, calling forth its bitterest opposition, and now at feud with the southern wing of his own party, that has rejected him for another. He would be an administration of continual party strife. The country could hope for no reformation, no peace and good government, if he therefore ought not to be preferred, in my judement, to Bell and Everett. [Cheers.] I have spoken not to complimentary to Mr. Douglas, but I have spoken because I desire to give my testimony to his truth. I believe Mr. Douglas to be a patriot, and I know him to be a Union man by all the evidences that could induce me to venture her of his sentiments. [Applause.] He is a generous, bold man, speaking what he thinks, and doing what he knows to be right. [Repeated applause.] But I am opposed to Mr. Douglas. I am for Bell and Everett. [Immense applause.]

We are now left only to compare Mr. Bell with the third candidate who stands in opposition—Mr. Breckinridge. And here, again, as in respect to Mr. Douglas, my objection is not to the candidate as an individual I should hope Mr. Breckinridge is not a disunionist. [A voice—Yes, he is.] He ought not to be. He belongs to a tribe of faithful, devoted Union men—the tribe of Kentuckians. [Great applause.] He must have been endowed with from the pots of his duty, far from the path in which all the impulses of his blood ought to carry him, if he should be a disunionist. But Mr. Breckinridge has made himself the head of a party. He is part and parcel of the present purposes of that party; and, as in the case of Mr. Douglas, I must judge of the public course by the party he consents to represent.

Who are they? There is one division south of Mason and Dixon's line that I know of—they call themselves the South party. [Applause.] We have long heard multitudinous of disunion in the South—more than the whispering of the wind. Threats have been often then uttered and by high men in high places. We have even conventions assembled for the purpose of promoting the cause of disunion. We have seen the flag of disunion displayed and the name of nullification—the State claims the right to annul the laws passed by the whole people of the United States, to annul acts of Congress—we have seen all this we have seen it organized into form and together form, one face and together, one presents an aspect, by the act of their men, by conventions assembled for the purpose, by open resolutions carried on between the States, and by public declarations that the movement was postponed because not enough States in the South could be got to join the enterprise to make it successful. We have seen all these evidences of a spirit of disunion. It is not material to say one from what cause this spirit has sprung; but be it for a single moment and ask the question, What cause for a dissolution of the Union? What harm has the Union done? Wrongs may have been done individuals, may have received wrong by subject legislation upon the part of Congress. Our great men may not have had their fair share of public honors from the hands of the Presidents. They may have received wrongs of this sort, but is the Union the author of such wrongs? What is the remedy which must be sought? It is to turn out of state places and to the power constitutional mode those who have mis-administered the Government. The Government has done no wrong. The Constitution and the Union have done no wrong. They cannot and ought not to be to be done to every man, and every State, and every section. Their agents may have disobeyed their injunctions, and everything may have been done wrong through individuals, but individuals are amenable. What remedy would the destruction of the Constitution afford? Could they get out of the rules injustice for the wrongs on account of which they would tear it down? Could it give any satisfaction? Could it make any atonement? No. And yet by some strange perversion of reason their minds have been brought to look upon disunion as a remedy for political wrongs. It has caused some of them; the destruction of it would be a great calamity, and the greatest of all evils to the people of the United States.

Others have taken a different view of it. They look with dissatisfaction toward the Union and especially toward it. The ultra Southern States participate in this feeling, and Senators in Congress, men, I know, of character and reputation, express the same fatal cause. This is the party of which we may on certain apprehensions that it will effect the dismemberment of the government. Many of its members are noble spirited gentlemen. It is only upon the one subject they have been misled, or have misled themselves. They have been betrayed into this delusion. In all other respects they are great and noble of heart character, but the spirit of disunion prevails among them, and it is only the more dangerous when entertained by such men. They openly talk about it, they write about it they invite it. They have rocked themselves into the belief that the government must be dissolved. They want to meet the inevitable necessity at once; they want to dissolve the Union immediately, to precipitate the people into it. The president is to be overthrown in the by-and-by.

The leaders anticipate great success on the part of the Republicans, and want now to effect a revolution in the cotton States, and establish a new government. These sentiments pervade the South, and make up the body and soul of the party which has nominated our fellow-citizen, Mr. Breckinridge, as its candidate for the presidency. In the name of God that by electing him you would give new energy to that destructive impulse, and new power to this disunion sentiment, and to the cause of disunion? Mr. Breckinridge himself follows the leaders. He is part and parcel of the great party. You see this by his nomination as a compromise of it, and can have former with the disasters that would follow if its success. Possibly it may be the policy of those who nominated him to unite old Ken-

The Memphis Appeal.

PUBLISHED DAILY, TRI-WEEKLY AND WEEKLY BY

JNO. M. M'CLANAHAN.....BENJAMIN T. DILL,

Under the style and firm of

M'CLANAHAN & DILL,

To whom all Letters on Business, or otherwise, should be Directed.

PRICE OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Daily (in advance) per annum.....$10.00
Tri-Weekly " " .....5.00
Weekly " " .....3.00

☞ All Daily subscriptions will be considered due and payable half-yearly in advance.

☞ The foregoing terms will be strictly and rigidly adhered to.

DAILY RATES OF ADVERTISING

For one square of ten lines or less, one insertion...$1.00
For each additional insertion of same.....50

| SPACE. | 1 Day. | 2 Days. | 3 Days. | 4 Days. | 5 Days. | 1 Week. | 2 Weeks. | 3 Weeks. | 1 Month. | 2 Months. | 3 Months. | 6 Months. | 1 Year. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | $ 3.00 | $ 4.00 | $ 5.00 | $ 6.00 | $ 7.00 | $ 9.00 | $10.00 | $12.00 | $15.00 | $18.00 | $25.00 | $35.00 | $50.00 |
| 2 | 4.00 | 6.00 | 7.00 | 8.00 | 9.00 | 12.00 | 15.00 | 18.00 | 25.00 | 32.00 | 40.00 | 60.00 | 80.00 |
| 3 | 5.00 | 6.00 | 8.00 | 10.00 | 12.00 | 15.00 | 18.00 | 21.00 | 30.00 | 40.00 | 50.00 | 70.00 | 100.00 |
| 4 | 6.00 | 8.00 | 10.00 | 12.00 | 14.00 | 18.00 | 21.00 | 25.00 | 35.00 | 45.00 | 60.00 | 80.00 | 125.00 |
| 5 | 7.00 | 10.00 | 12.00 | 14.00 | 16.00 | 20.00 | 25.00 | 30.00 | 40.00 | 50.00 | 70.00 | 90.00 | 150.00 |
| 6 | 10.00 | 14.00 | 17.00 | 20.00 | 23.00 | 30.00 | 35.00 | 40.00 | 50.00 | 60.00 | 80.00 | 100.00 | 175.00 |
| 7 | 12.00 | 16.00 | 20.00 | 24.00 | 28.00 | 35.00 | 40.00 | 50.00 | 60.00 | 70.00 | 90.00 | 120.00 | 200.00 |
| 8 | 13.00 | 18.00 | 22.00 | 26.00 | 30.00 | 40.00 | 50.00 | 60.00 | 70.00 | 80.00 | 100.00 | 125.00 | 225.00 |
| 9 | 15.00 | 20.00 | 25.00 | 30.00 | 35.00 | 45.00 | 55.00 | 65.00 | 80.00 | 90.00 | 110.00 | 150.00 | 250.00 |

☞ One square, renewable weekly, per annum..$40.00
" " " twice a week, " ..60.00
" " " three a week, " ..80.00
☞ Two square, renewable weekly, per annum..60.00
" " " twice a week, " ..80.00
" " " three a week, " ..90.00

☞ All advertisements for the Appeal must be handed in at the Office.

☞ All transient advertisements must be marked for a specified time. When the time marked, they will be charged for one week, and discontinued at the end of that time.

☞ All advertisements required to be kept on second page, CHARGED AS NEW EACH DAY, and on third page, at advance over stated rates.

☞ Advertisements directed to be displayed, or set in large type, charged at DOUBLE RATES.

☞ Yearly advertisers will be allowed to send extra advertising space over contract, and when LARGE TYPE is required to be used, or the advertisement kept on inside page.

☞ Yearly advertisers will be charged extra at regular rates, for Wants, Rents, Removals, Co-Partnerships, Sales, Lost and Found, etc.

☞ Transient Advertisements must be paid for in advance.

☞ No advertisement will appear in the Weekly paper unless paid for.

☞ Advertisements to be inserted in the Weekly paper only, or at irregular intervals in either of the papers, will be charged $1 per square for each and every insertion.

☞ Announcing Candidates for State, County and Municipal Offices, $5 each, to be paid in advance in every instance.

☞ All advertisements for charitable institutions, religious societies, ball, town and other public meetings, to be charged half rates.

☞ Marriages and Deaths are published as news; but Obituaries, Tributes of Respect and Resolutions are ranked as other advertisements.

☞ Marriage and Funeral advertisements will be charged to the insertion.

☞ Editorial notices in local column will be charged 20 cents per line.

☞ No deduction or variation will be made from the foregoing rates.

M'CLANAHAN, & DILL.

Professional Cards.

E. S. HAMMOND,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Memphis, Tenn. Office No. 8 A. Cabaniss' Row, Second and Main streets. Will attend to business entrusted to him in West Tennessee and North Mississippi.

Refer to Messrs. Brown, Owen & Co., Memphis, Tenn.; Messrs. Bridges & Marshall, Memphis, Tenn.; M. Neeley, Real Estate Broker; Messrs. Green & Brickell, Attorneys, Ripley, Miss.; Messrs. Jordan & Elliott, Martyr-dom, Tenn. [a26-1y

W. D. BEARD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Memphis, Tenn. Office No. 312, in Proctor's Block, Main street.

Refer to J. M. Bowling, Hughes, George Dixon, Stratton, McIlwrit & Co., and Falls & Cash, Memphis; Col. J. W. Polk, Hon. Wm. H. Bond, L. Leverring, Wood, Jr., Mo. [a26-4w

J. P. CARUTHERS—E. W. YERGER—MOSES WHITE.
Caruthers, Yerger & White,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW, Memphis, Tennessee—Office No. 3 Exchange Building. [a30-1y

J. A. WILLIAMS, M. D.,
HOMEOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,
CORNER Main and Jefferson streets, over Lehman & Co.'s store, Memphis, Tennessee.

Office hours from 11 A. M. to 1 P. M. Residence, second house west of St. Mary's church, north side of Poplar street. [a26-6m

DR. G. W. ACREE,
DENTIST,
ALL operations performed with the skill of a master. Diseases of the gums treated with the most approved plan, with marked success. Diseases of the mouth and teeth treated upon the most approved plan, with marked success. Operations on the teeth, in the future the public with confidence in my skill, or to an inducement to call at my office. my1

CHARLES H. STROTHER
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW and Collector of Claims, Memphis, Tenn. Office on Bank avenue, between Madison and Monroe streets. mar25-1y

CHARLES W. TROUSDALE,
Attorney-at-Law,
MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Office in the Webster Building, Main street, second floor. [a24-1y

GEO. A. MINNIS.....S. J. LEA.
MINNIS & LEA,
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW,
MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE,
Office Clay Building, No. 3.

C. FAY.....WM. BROWN.....F. COTTER.
FAY, BROWN & FOSTER,
ARCHITECTS,
ARE prepared to furnish drawings and specifications for any public or private edifice, and also to give superintendence to the same. Office in the Exchange Building. [a27-1y

WATCHES,
SILVER AND PLATED WARE, CLOCKS AND JEWELRY.

Diamonds,
Fancy Goods, Cutlery, Pistols, Canes, Etc.

WE have just received our spring stock of the above articles, embracing many new and desirable patterns, which we will sell low for cash.

Watches and Jewelry repaired and warranted.

A. J. WARREN & CO.,
282 corner Main and Monroe streets, Memphis.
my8-tawly

The following
MAGNIFICENT SCHEMES
will be drawn in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners, appointed by the Governor.

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S LOTTERY,
CLASS NO. 454,
Draws on Saturday, September 22, '60.
78 Numbers—14 Drawn Ballots.
ONE GRAND CAPITAL PRIZE OF
$70,000!

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 Prize of | $40,000 | 100 Prizes of | $600 | | |
| 1 " | 20,275 | 65 " | 115 | | |
| 2 Prizes of | 10,000 | 65 " | 100 | | |
| 2 " | 6,000 | 65 " | 90 | | |
| 3 " | 4,000 | 65 " | 80 | | |
| 3 " | 3,000 | 65 " | 60 | | |
| 4 " | 2,000 | 65 " | 50 | | |
| 7 " | 1,000 | 65 " | 40 | | |
| 9 " | 500 | 65 " | 30 | | |
| 22,998 prizes amounting to | | | | | $1,171,950 |

SCALE ONE PRIZE TO EVERY TWO TICKETS.

WHOLE TICKETS, $60; HALVES, $30; QUARTERS, $15.

Certificates of Packages will be sold at the following rates, which is the risk:

Certificate of Package of 25 Whole Tickets.....$300 00
" " 50 Half " ..... 150 00
" " 50 Quarter " ..... 75 00
" " 100 Eighths " ..... 150 00

SPLENDID SCHEME!
Each Wednesday in September.
Class 424 draws Wednesday, Sept. 5, 1860.
Class 436 draws Wednesday, Sept. 12, 1860.
Class 448 draws Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1860.
Class 460 draws Wednesday, Sept. 26, 1860.
NEARLY ONE PRIZE TO EVERY TWO TICKETS.
78 Numbers—14 Drawn Ballots.
One Capital Prize of $35 000!

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 Prize of | $35,000 | 64 Prizes of | $100 |
| 1 " | 4,000 | 64 " | 75 |
| 1 prize of | 2,127 | 64 " | 50 |
| 10 prizes of | 1,000 | 64 " | 30 |
| 20 " | 1,000 | 64 " | 20 |
| 30 " | 500 | 64 " | 10 |
| 255 " | 100 | 10,214 " | 10 |
| 10,512 prizes amounting to | | | $575,507 |

Whole Tickets, $10; Halves, $5; Quarters, $2 50.

Certificate of Packages in the above Schemes, to be drawn in Class 460 Wednesday, Sept. 26, 1860, at the rates: Whole in the risk:

Certificate of Package of 26 Whole Tickets.....$141 00
" " 26 Half " ..... 70 50
" " 26 Quarter " ..... 35 25

In ordering Tickets or Certificates,
Inclose the amount of money to our address for what you desire to purchase, and remember that when Prizes are drawn, and whether you wish Whole, Halves, Quarters or Eighths, it will be required to send whole ordered, by first mail, together with the scheme.

Immediately after the drawing, a printed Drawing, certified to by the Commissioners, will be sent to parties who purchase.

Purchasers will please write their signatures plain, and give their Post Office, County and State.

☞ All Prizes of