THE TRAGEDY OF TELEPHONE GIRL

From the French of Chas. Foley. We happened to come out of the club together, and so I walked along the boulevard with M. Maroux, a man with a kindly face, but marked with an infinite melancholy.

"Will you wait a minute for me?" said I, as we reached the postoffice. "I wish to go in and telephone."

He started at the last word, and I saw his grip tighten on his cane. When I returned, he still seemed nervous, and to break an uncomfortable silence, I made some commonplace remark about what a marvelous invention the telephone was, and what inestimable services the progress of science is doing us every day.

"Do you think so?" replied M. Maroux, in a tone of bitter irony. "It seems to me, on the contrary, that science, far from aiding us, only emphasizes our human weakness and cruelly multiplies the means that can cause our suffering. But you will understand me better if I give you an example of what I mean from my own experience."

I was spending my autumn vacation on and forth Thursdays of each month at Kalamazoo block. President, E. Strum; vice president, John Pierling; treasurer, Richard Calahan; recording secretary, M. B. Glucke, 525 West 8th street.

details which were essential to the success of my venture. I could not dismiss him immediately, and it was late when I re-entered the telephone office. My heart throbbed with impatience, and my hand trembled so that I could scarcely hold the receiver to my ear. It was some seconds before I could hear anything.

"Hello, Louise, hello!" I cried. "Are you there? Answer me!" "At last I heard her voice, but it was low, oppressed, and filled with terror. "Oh, it's you at last! For the last hour I have been nearly crazed. I could not find the gun—that boy must have stolen it when he went away. Blaise has not come back, they must have got him out of the way on purpose. Oh, I am losing my head, I can scarcely breathe for terror—I think I hear—in the garden—far away—wait while I listen!"

Clutching the box for support, I could only cry: "Louise, I beg of you, do not leave me in this silence—what do you hear?" "The dogs are growling—now they are barking furiously. They have run to the bottom of the garden—now, suddenly they are still—there is a deathly silence! But—yes, it sounds like muffled footsteps on the pebbled walk—as if someone were coming towards the house."

"Go on, speak, Louise! I am straining. I shall go mad! What do you hear?—What do you hear now?" "Nothing now—almost nothing—yes, there is a gentle, steady, grating sound, as if a chisel were being slipped under a shutter to force it—the sash gives way—a window is broken—oh, I am terrified!"

I shook the telephone-box in my agony. "Telephone to Marseilles, I cried. "To warn the police." "How can I? The city is three leagues away—they would come too late—and I cannot—oh, I am going mad!"

"Call for help or hide yourself—yes, that's it. Take the little one and hide!" "I cannot, I have no strength left—they are coming, the stairs creak—they are in the hall—they are feeling along the wall, they try the door—Marcel! My God—help, help!"

There were two muffled cries of terror. Then a vague confused noise. Then a jumble of indefinable sounds, then silence. Something seemed to crack in my brain, and I fell unconscious.

Gasping, as if he had lived through this terrible scene again, M. Maroux came out from the Gazette. "I am sorry you can learn the details of the crime. It is known as 'The Morande Atrocity.' By it I lost my wife, my child, and my two servants. But no report can describe, no mere words can ever express, the hideous nightmare that modern science brought me, the frightful torture of a man, who, at a distance of a hundred leagues, hears the despairing cries of his wife and son, who are being strangled, while he is powerless to do more than batter impotently on a wooden telephone box."

A Chilly Deal. From the Cleveland Plaindealer: A cruel Boston judge fined a man $20 for kissing a young woman without first assuring himself of her willingness. "Those who are familiar with the woman's feminine surroundings will look upon the amount as little less than exorbitant."

America Cannot Pose. From the Milwaukee Sentinel: Right and law will prevail in the end, and unless current signs fall this passing orgy of riot and lynching is going to be brought to a close in short and summary fashion in the near future. But the evil has evidently gone so far already that our attempt to pose humanly as met with jeers and derision the civilized world over.

Geometrical Progression of Feud Trials From the Baltimore American: The trouble with the murder trials in Kentucky is that when you get a witness sufficiently freed of his terror from ambushing to tell his story it is necessary to untorture five or six others in order to find out whether the willing witness is lying. It is a geometrical progression that bids fair to run on into infinity.

All Knew the Answer. The teacher was telling her class things not found in the text-books. "When anything is repeated by many persons it gets to be called a 'saying,'" she said. "Now, when a thing is repeated and accepted as a fact by everybody, what do we call it?" The intelligent pupils answered in chorus. "A chestnut!"

DETROIT AND BACK $1200. The annual fall excursions to Detroit, Mich., will leave Duluth, September 13th and 18th, via the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Ry., connecting at St. Ignace with the palatial steamers of the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Co.

Very well, but let us talk about yourself. You should not have let Blaise go. Even if he drives back, he cannot return before ten or eleven o'clock. My sole confidence was in knowing that he was near you, and now he is gone. And then that boy who ran away before you had time to think of making sure his news was true! At any rate, Blaise has left you the two dogs and the gun, has he not?"

"The two dogs are asleep on the porch. As for the gun Blaise must have left it in the hall. I shall go and make sure. Can you hear Marcel? He is sitting in my lap, and is saying good night to you. Listen!"

"Good night, papa, good night." "Good night, my darlings. I must have a bit of dinner now, and then I will come to you again."

Once outside, I felt oppressed by what my wife had just told me. That uneasiness which had hardly been quieted by the first conversation, now waxed stronger at the thought of this strange, incredible letter which had taken my wife's one defender, the only man in the house, that by the time I reached the hotel I could not swallow a mouthful. I left the table to turn to the telephone office, but my agent found me and laid before me a lot of

A Future Diplomat. "Remember, Willie, I told you if you ate peaches and cream you could not have the watermelon. Now I made up my mind I would eat the watermelon."

"But, mamma," said little Willie, "I did not make up my mind that I wanted the watermelon until I finished the peaches and cream!"
