PROHIBITION LEADER HITS HARD AT CRITIC John G. Woolley, America's Greatest Liquor Opponent Writes Forcibly. Tells Union-Unionists What Union Labor is Doing to Further His Great Cause.

The union label is flying at the mast staff of The New Voice, the greatest exponent of Prohibition in America. Because of this fact a subscriber to The New Voice asked that the paper be stopped in the following letter: "Publishers The New Voice:—I wrote you some time ago not to send me any more The New Voice with the union label on; but it is still coming. Do you think that I don't mean what I say, when I tell you to stop sending the same, or are you like the rest union men, you try to force me to take it whether I want it or not? I am no lunatic that don't know what I want and not what I don't want. When I get so I can't attend to my own business I will let some men help me out; but no butchers are wanted like those you have in Chicago that go under name of Symptomatics with union (or strikers). Send them out where the governor of Col. did when the butchers appeared in the mining district, they don't need to work with non-union men, they can have their own way then. I work with union men every day, it is all right, but if they get in there head that no others have a right to live, they are wrong, and will find it out. It is my own sweet will that no union label shall come in my house.

"GUST A. JOHNSON. "Jamestown, N. Y., May 1." "This is the fearless Woolley's reply. It is our view that Mr. Johnson did the proper thing in ordering his paper discontinued. He felt that the we union label defiled his house and he cast it into outer darkness. He lived up to what light he had. We believe, however, that if Mr. Johnson had united with a union of his craft and joined loyally with his brethren in efforts for their mutual uplift, the experience would have made him a more tolerant individual, besides improving his grammar, spelling and manners. But irrespective of all that, it is a healthy sign that when he felt that he "had a kick coming," he used it good and strong. In other words, he struck. It will do him good, and it won't hurt us.

The union label and the brief comment on it in The New Voice, appears to have created some excitement. Several labor papers commented thereon warmly and various letters of appreciation reached this office. Among others was one from the private secretary of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who wrote: "President Gompers directs me to say that he is very much pleased to know that your paper is now being issued as a union publication, and he read with interest your article upon the 'Union Label'."

About the same time, Rev. Charles Stelzle, the "machinist evangelist," preaching in the First Presbyterian church at Seattle (April 14) declared, "I want to tell you that the labor unions themselves are doing more for the cause of temperance than the ministry. I know it. Others may not, but I know that they are to be encouraged by the labor organizations." Whatever the labor union movement may be or may not be, it represents a struggle for better things against overwhelming odds. It is a struggle against the sweat-shop, against child labor, against unsanitary tenements, against starvation wages, against squalor, against the Simon Legrees of industry who had labor stretched on the rack, wrenching from its sinews dividends for the fat and lazy.

Born of want and sired by necessity, but inspired by hope and love of offspring and kin, the labor movement began, single-handed, its struggle for the higher life. True, the union movement did not always do the right thing in the right place. But let Capital, whose stupendous blunders plunged this nation into civil war and drenched this land in blood—chiefly the blood of the laborer—cast the first stone at it. True, some unions hold their meets in hovels or barns or barracks, or even free to tempt patronage for the laborer established by the stingy rich to make money for the school fund. Let that coward, grimacing member of the Union League of Philadelphia, organized to suck champagne bottles without a license, leave the first brick at this.

Who comes to the surface to speak for this surging, struggling, tolling, sweating mass of blood and bone and brain? It is the Powderlyist, the Gompers, the Mitchells, the Arthurs, the Trevellicks, all hurrying curses at the drink that destroys their kind, that bolts their hopes, that defeats their strikes, that impoverishes their homes, that fills their union halls with wrangling and gloom.

The man in whose breast was placed, by mistake, a gizzard instead of a heart, sees nothing in all this but the "strike." Suppose there was nothing in it but the "strike." In heaven's name why don't you strike? When you see your daily paper printing flaming advertisements of whiskey sellers offering "pure whiskey" at practically the cost of the tax alone or telling through the press, why don't you "strike" and take a paper that is clean?

When you see your school board at tempting to nullify the law requiring temperance instruction in the schools, why don't you "strike"? Make a "rough house," if necessary, until there is a change. When you see that your grocer is selling whiskey as a side line, why don't you strike and patronize a clean place? When your big department store begins to sell whiskey for "family use," why don't you "strike" and transfer your trade to a "fair" house? How can you tell your boy to avoid the saloon's free lunch when you patronize a whiskey department store to save two cents on a can of beans? When you see your church gadding the preacher on the temperance question because the rich deacon rents his property for rum selling, why don't you "strike"? If your church, for the sake of the deacon's rum money to yours, let her have it, but place your contributions where they will count for God instead of the Devil. If your lodge or your club proposes to introduce wine to liven the feast, why don't you "strike"? Don't lie growling in the corner like a dog, but strike! When your political party proposes to license drunken fiends to lie in wait for your body by day and pursue your daughter by night, why, in the name of eternity, don't you strike? Until you have mustered up the moral nerve to do this, better not complain too much about the unions striking against injustice. Such as you don't know injustice when you see it.

A CRUSHER FOR TOP. "I wish they'd invent a new expression to call Friday of each month the account of a recent wedding. 'It's always 'the blushing' bride.' "Well," replied Mrs. Top, "when you consider what sort of husbands most girls have to marry you can't wonder at them blushing."—London Tit-Bits.

From the Yonkers Statesman: "Pop," "Yes, my son." "What is an optimist?" "An optimist is a man who believes that everything comes to him who waits." "And if he waits and nothing comes, what is he, pop?" "Why, he's a fool!"

LONDON HOUSES ARE LABELLED By placing memorial tablets on the houses on the estate of the late Duke of Bedford by famous men the Dukes of Bedford and Westminster are setting an admirable example to other great London landlords, says Tit-Bits.

The latest of these historic houses to be thus indicated for posterity is a short holiday at Westminster, Buckingham Palace road, which for three years was the home of Thomas Campbell, the poet. Here in "a square room lighted from the ceiling, the walls lined with well-furnished bookshelves, and pictures on the floor covered with a Turkey carpet, and a stove in the corner," Campbell wrote his books and entertained his friends at breakfast and dinner towards the close of his life. A curious and characteristic story is told of the Scottish poet, who, during a short holiday at Westminster, wrote to ask his friend Beattie to send him some money he had left "in the press in his bedroom at 8 Victoria square."

In vain Beattie searched the press and ransacked the whole house, but found a trace of the money count and found, until, just as he had abandoned the hunt in despair, he chanced to pick up a red embroidered slipper, in which he discovered a roll of bank notes of the value of £300. Among the houses on which the Duke of Bedford has recently placed or is about to place commemorative tablets is 11 Bedford square, once the home of the enormously rich, clever and eccentric Henry Cavendish, of whom a friend said: "If any one dined with Cavendish, he invariably gave them leg of mutton and nothing else."

One day, so the story runs, when he had dined three or four scientific men to live with him, his housekeeper asked him what she was to provide for dinner. "A leg of mutton," was the prompt answer. "But, sir, that won't be enough for five." "Well, then, get two," was the reply. Cavendish was probably one of the smartest and most successful men who ever lived, and rather than face strangers who sought an interview with him he would lock himself up in his bedroom, or, as he did on one memorable occasion, hide under a table until all danger was over.

Another recently marked house is that of Lord Mansfield in Bloomsbury square, which was sacked and burnt one June day in 1780 by the Gordon rioters. "Quitting the coach," wrote an eye-witness of the scene, we crossed the square, and scarce had we got under the wall of Bedford House, when we heard the door of Lord Mansfield's house burst open with violence. In a few minutes all the contents of the apartments being precipitated from the windows, were piled up and trampled in the street. Lord and Lady Mansfield narrowly escaped the fury of the mob by beating a precipitate retreat by a back door.

At 65 Russell square, marked by the Duke of Bedford for his tablet, Sir Thomas Lawrence, president of the Royal Academy, made his home for a quarter of a century, dying there in 1830. It was of this house that the Rev. John Mitford wrote: "We shall never forget the Cossacks, mounted on their small white horses, with their long spears grounded, landing their sentinels at the door of this great painter while he was taking the portrait of his general, Platoff."

At 27 Southampton street, Covent Garden, David Garrick and his wife lived and made merry a century and a half ago. Here the great actor used to give his rather roisterous suppers to his friends, keeping them in roars of laughter by his amusing stories and screaming mimicry of the great names of the day. Dr. Johnson and others, and generally disturbing the peace of the neighborhood by his late hours, practical jokes and midnight revels. Lord Loughborough's house, 67 Russell square, is also among those recently chosen for commemorative tablets. Here was the "paltry and servile politician," as Lord Holland characterized the lord chancellor, entertained George III. and his family when they went to view the Foundling Hospital. It was rather a sorry return for this hospitality that when Loughborough died, soon after his elevation to the earldom of Rosslyn, King George should declare that "he has not left a greater rogue behind him."

St. Samuel Romer's home at 54 Gower street, is also to be marked for posterity. This great lawyer, who was pronounced by Lord Brougham "beyond question or pretence the first man in the courts of this country," it will be remembered, was a small London jeweller. Just at this most brilliant epoch in his great career, when his well-merited honors were being showered on him, he lost his beloved wife, and in his anguish cut his throat, dying almost instantly. The bodies of husband and wife were buried in the same grave. Those are but a few of the houses once tenanted by great men which are now being labeled in London. Among others is the house in South street, Park lane, where Charles James Fox, statesman once lived; and No. 10, Bloomsbury square, where Isaac Disraeli wrote his books while little Benjamin ran about the enclosure of the "old London" in his nursemaid, sublimely unconscious of the brilliant future that awaited him.
