LINES

Addressed to the Ladies who Accompanied the Advancing Column of General Scott's Army on the 21st of July.

BY MRS. N. VENILIA HEWLETT.

"Scott, had so admirably planned his attack that not a thought of repulse was entertained." Correspondents were requested after the 21st to mail future communications to Manassas or Richmond. A large number of ladies and gentlemen followed the rear of the army to Centerville—the former to welcome the 'heroes,' on their return, and the latter to witness the fight. Senator Wilson had a champagne party in honor of the anticipated victory—a number of Congressmen, letter writers and ladies were of the party. Just as they sat down to the table the news came that 'the day is ours!' The joy was unbounded. The necks of the bottles were broken off the sooner to get to the exhilerating beverage, to drink to the glad tidings. Scarcely had the first glass been dispatched when all eyes were arrested by the rout of flying wagons, carriages, horses and men. The cry sauve qui peut resounded on all sides. The scampering was instantaneous and universal."

Went ye out, on holy Sabbath, buoyant as the morning skies—
Went ye out to greet your heroes—when the victory should be won?
Eighty Thousand Yankee Heroes with belted swords on them on skies bright,
Marching to crush "the rebels"—surely 'twas a goodly sight.
And ye went with song and laughter—went with music and with wine,
With your victors to rejoice—with your conquerors to dine.

Hark, the boom of cannon telling of the deeds of valor done,
And the shout of exultation rends the air—"the day is won"
Then the rosy wine quivaking, from the banquet-table spurted,
Ye drank—but not unto your victors—ye drank—but to your foes given dead.
Who like autumn leaves were dying, on Manassas' bloody plain.
Unto these ye held your banquet—ye drank unto your thousands slain.

But hark! the soldiers are coming—faster, faster, still they fly,
Leaving thousands of their comrades on Manassas' plains to die.
Others falling by the wayside are forsaken and forgot,
In the wild tumultuous rushing—backward led by Gen. Scott.
And ye ladies, too, retreated—with your heroes joined the rush;
Such a race was never witnessed—as that, beneath a Sabbath sun.

Southern matrons do not murmur—ye demanding woman's right,
Followed your advancing army—followed their inglorious flight.
Saw your lovers in dishonor—dash your ambrotypes away,
Upon which their lips had rested—swearing they would win the day.
'Twas your right—ye northern women—and we envy not your glory—
'Twas your right—on Sabbath holy—to behold your nation's shame.

Tell it in your social conclaves—spread the tidings far and wide
How your heroes fled in terror—how your vanquished leader died.
Teach a rising generation—of the grand reception given
Yankee rangers—by "our boys"—tender youths not three times seven.
How they welcomed them with cannon, to the soil our soldiers gave us,
And by thousands introduced them to our noble, gallant Davis.

And when next ye quaff your wine cups, to the noble and the brave
Don't forget your fallen heroes—slumbering now without a grave—
Those who by our "rebel bors" on Manassas' plains were all,
And whose bodies fed the vultures of the soil they would invade.
There our gallant Southern heroes heaped the Yankees upon,
As a monument fitting soul of the perfidious Scott.

CATALPA HERMITAGE, August 12, 1861.

A Spunky Southern Woman.

A letter written from Mississippi by a young lady to her cousin in Mobile:

MISSISSIPPI, August 14, 1861.

DEAR COUSIN: There is no news in town, or at least not anything from the war but what you have heard. My brother is in Missouri, I expect near St. Louis. I fear to hear from him, but pray for his safe return. I ask God to protect and spare him to us, and that is all I can do. Sometimes I am deeply distressed, but 'tis useless to be depressed in spirits. I know the South will be victorious, but in whipping them we will have to lose some of the noblest hearts that ever throbbed in human breasts. With such generals as Davis, Beauregard, Johnston, and many others, the South can whip the world. I wish a regiment of ladies could go to the war, as I am nearly crazy to see the Yankees killed. Yes, a happy privilege, I would consider it to close the eyes of every Yankee, and I hope, before August, 1865, the last one of them will be dead and buried so deep they will never be resurrected. I spend all my time knitting and sewing for our soldiers. I feel we can never do enough for them. I was in the country the other day, and some young gentlemen called on me, (some that should have been at the wars), and I sen them word, "please excuse me, I was very much engaged sewing for the soldiers;" and I tell you I do not think it right to receive any attention from young men who get out of the way of the wars, if 'tis possible or them to go.

We have had some rains, but I hope we will make cotton enough to pay our subscription to the Confederate loan.

Your affec ionate cousin, M.
