RUDY GILES.

UP-HILL WORK—A LIFE SKETCH.

"Ah, me! This is up hill work!"

So said Albert Fairfield in the morning of his life.

And how many thousands of earth's toiling sons are giving breath to the same mournful complaint.

"It is up-hill work!" sighs the boy, turning his eye from the page of his lesson book, and peering out beyond the pent up school room to the hills and woods that rise so invitingly in the distance. "It is up-hill work!" says the youth, bending over his bench, and thinking of the time when his apprenticeship will expire, and he can be his own master, and work for himself. "It is up-hill work," says the laborer, as he wipes the sweat from his brow, and gives off upon the long stretch of ground yet to be ploughed ere he can rest upon the harvest. "It is up-hill work!" groans the poor debtor, bowing beneath the weight of a load never yet to be overcome.

Ay—it is. It is up-hill work—all of it. "Ah, me! This is up hill work!"

Albert Fairfield said to me the second time. When he first spoke I dropped my eyes to the ground, and thought. Albert was two and twenty years of age, and was by trade a mechanist. He loved Sophy Winthrop, and Sophy Winthrop loved him. Sophy was an orphan, had years young r than Albert; she was my niece, and her home was beneath my roof. She was the only child of my sister, and I loved her as though she had been my own. When Albert Fairfield asked me if he might have Sophy for his wife, I wanted time to consider. I knew that he was a young man of unblemished character; of excellent standing, and of fair intellect. I knew that he was poor; but that was nothing against him. I made myself sure that Sophy loved him, and then I gave him my answer. I told him that when he could provide a home he should have my niece for his wife.

Said I—"Sophy is willing to marry you now, but I do not think it best. I should prefer that you would at least own a house before you marry. If you will purchase the house, Sophy shall furnish it from top to bottom,—her expenses are all paid up in equal to years, and you may then commence your married life with a good start."

With another I might not have made this stipulation; but I knew Albert's weakness. And I sought to overcome it. I knew it at he had powers enough, but they were not self to lead one. He had yet a lesson to learn in life, and I thought he had better learn it before marriage than after. When I first gave the conditional consent to his marriage with my ward, he received it gratefully, and said he would go ahead. He thought then only of the prize to be won.

A year had elapsed, and Albert Fairfield seemed to be weary and disheartened.

"Ah me! This is up hill work!" And he bent back, and folded his hands upon his knees.

"Of course it is," said I. "Had I not known that it would be up hill work I should not have asked you to do it."

He looked at me inquiringly.

"How steep is the hill?" I asked him.

He stood and upon me, and I repeated the question,—

"How steep is the hill?"

"Is as steep and long," he replied.

"But you are part way up," I suggested.

He shook his head. "It will take me a long time to climb to the top."

"Do you have reached the top before you?"

"Yes."

"——ands of them?"

"Yes."

"——hey were no stronger than you are?"

"No," said Albert, after a little hesitation, "they may have had more help."

"Ah, my boy," I returned, with an admiratory stroke of the head, "you are showing me your weakness. Do you remember, a year ago, the conversation we had?"

"Yes."

"You asked me for the hand of my niece. I intimated to you that she could pay a much lowered fortune in the house as it would cost you to build it. I believe it would be better for you both if you could commence upon the humblest. As far as means were concerned, I felt you to be able to support a wife. Circumstances had placed her on the top of the hill. I showed you where she stood, and you promised me that you would go at work to reach her. Has you least failed you?"

Albert made no reply.

"Do you love Sophy less?"

He answered me quickly "No, no. I love her better than ever."

"And yet you would sit down and fold your hands upon the hill side. Albert, I did not think this of you. Wish such a prize upon the top I had in, poor that you would push on without faltering. Look—look, and see the work you have before you—see how many have gone up in advance. Look, Albert, from where you stand. Look up, and look down. Will you join the air at the top, or will you fall back into—and weak, and join those at the bottom?"

The old man bowed heavily.

"UP HILL WORK!" I cried, resting my hand for a moment upon his shoulder. "What is life but a hill! There may be a state of existence, for children and weaklings, down in the ceaseless valley; but the life of the living, acting man, is up, up hill—up, up, up—the higher the better. Do you tell me that you have met with disappointment? Then overcome them. Don't let them overcome you. If you have lost the path, go back and find it, and look out more sharply in future time. If you have found the path—look up by some impediment—move it out of your way. If you cannot move it, then work your way over it, or around it, as may be best. Look up, Albert, and see who stand higher in the world. See who have most honor and most respect. You shall find them to be those who have met and overcome the most minor one in their way up the hill. Look up—look up, my son, and behold the proud eminence yonder. See the noble souls all delight to honor. See what honor is in his journey up the hill. What did he do with difficulties? He met them in his will, and changed them into blessings. He made them stepping stones of experience, and pushed his way upward with renewed energy.

"Do you call it up-hill work, Albert? Aye—it is up-hill work—glorious, honorable work. And what will you do? You are on the hill now. The path is before you—what will you do? Will you go back to the valley of shade—will you sit down in idleness where you are—or will you summon your manhood, and move up? Answer me."

The young man bowed his head for a little while upon his hands, and then he gazed up into my face. I saw that the current of his feelings had changed. His lips were set more firmly, a manly flush was upon his cheeks, and a new fire was in his eye. He rose to his feet; he swept the hair away from his brow; and presently he said:

"Well—you shall see."

I knew what he meant—I knew how strongly his resolution had been fixed; but I could not suffer him to depart without one more word of counsel.

"Albert," I said, taking his hand, "suffer me to speak once more. In your upward march you will meet obstacles; and the more persevering of obstacles will be such as result from your own oversight and indecision. Utter no idle complaint. Every moment of repining is a step backward; every thought of regret is a barrier thrown across your path; and every feeling of envy, spent upon those who are ahead of you, makes additional load which you must bear as you go."

He said that he understood me; and he took me again to wait.

I did wait. I waited patiently, and with growing hope. I watched the youth, and I saw that he had commenced the up hill work in earnest. From a hesitating, dreaming, wishing man he grew to be a living, acting, working man. He walked the street, no longer with his head bent; but he walked erect, with his eye fixed straight before him. He grew stronger and stronger—I could see it in the firm pause, in the step, in the outspreading of his chest, and in the wakeful tone of his face.

Two years more, and Albert Fairfield came to me again; and this time he claimed his ward.

"Have you a house?" I said.

He handed me a deed by which was conveyed to him one of the prettiest cottage residences in the town.

"I have built, he explained, "but the owner of this was about to leave the country and he gave me a grand bargain—so grand a bargain, sir, that I have paid for the property, and have some three hundred dollars left."

"You shall have your wife," I said him as she is ready to marry with you, and she has been ready this long time—been ready with her love and change-less devotion. Go to her, and make such arrangements as you please."

—and Sophy were married, and when they were settled down in their new home, I went to see them. After a time—after I had seen what a paradise of earthly bliss that home was—I drew Albert aside, and asked him if I had not been right.

He told me that I had.

"——ve had to work?" I suggested.

"Yes."

"——have met with trials?"

"Yes."

"——now, in this hour, how do you regard the labors of the past?"

He caught me by the hand, and while his eye glistened, and his face flushed with deep feeling, he said:

"In this hour, standing as I do upon the top of the first grand eminence of life, I look back upon the past as a place of labor and of useful labor. I have met with trials, and I have met with disappointments. In the hour when they came they seemed dark and thankless, but now, looking back upon them, from the hill of success, I find them to have been really so many the tools made by the effort of my own mind. Ah, sir, you were right. The only true life is that which moves upward as it moves onward, and the only effective labor is that which leads us to the hill. The heaven, to be a safe one, must be above us. Yes, you—you were right, and I back God that I have had the strength to follow your counsel."

FOREIGN NEWS.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., September 23.—The Persia, with Liverpool dates to the 14th, via Queenstown on the 15th, passed Cape Ray this morning. Her advices are four days later.

Breadstuffs quiet and steady with the exception of corn, which was strongly held.

Provisions dull. Cotton 9-16@3/8.

New York stocks better, with a fair business.

Money and exchange, no new features.

The Persia reports meeting the Great Eastern putting back to Liverpool in a damaged condition.

The London Times editorially ridicules the passport system of the United States, and says that it will not secure the end desired. Timely complaint England has to make in the matter in regard to the discourtesy to Lord Lyons, in leaving him to learn of the new arrangement from the newspapers.

Movements were making of troops preparatory to their embarkation to Canada.

It is confirmed that our minister at Brussels has visited Garibaldi and offered him a command in the Federal army. The Herald says it cannot give a decided negative to the report of his acceptance of the offer by Garibaldi.

The news is confirmed that Spain is to join in the Anglo-French expedition to Mexico.

Dr. Russell, in another letter to the Times on American affairs, says that Gen. McClellan is rapidly becoming master of the situation, and that the Federalists by water, both on the seaboard and down the Mississippi river, are greatly embarrassing the South.

It was stated that the city of New York contains forty five cases of fever for the northern army, but the agents of the fever denied all knowledge of any shipment of such patients of contraband war.

TIGER CHASE IN ARKANSAS.

The following account of a tiger chase is extracted from the North Lincoln Sentinel, a regimental paper, published in Graham's Farm. The writer, after alluding to his sporting experiences of all kinds and in all quarters of the globe, declares that he never witnessed a novel or hideously exciting a chase as that about to be described:

No long ago, I spent a few days at Fort Brown, a small military post on the banks of the Great Red river, where my friend W. was stationed. One evening, as my friend and I were returning home of an a no hunt for game, day's duck shooting, were startled by hearing the most extraordinary noises and [illegible] from us. It seemed as if all the demons in the infernal regions had been unchained, and were amusing themselves by trying to frighten us to our more all by their horrid yelling. We stood in breathless expectation, not knowing what could possibly be the cause of this diabolical row, with all sorts of strange conjectures flashing across our mind. Nearer and nearer the yelling and screeching approached, and presently the cause became visible to our astonished eyes. Some three or four hundred yards to the right, upon the brow of a small hill, a spotted leopard (commonly called in this country a tiger, though much smaller than the lord of the forest in size) came in view, bounding along with all a speed and energy of despair, while close behind him followed an enormous pack of baboons, from whose throats proceeded the demoniacal sounds that had, a few seconds before, so startled us. Our excitement in the chase, as you may suppose, was intense. On went the tiger, making for the river, the baboons following like avenging furies, and actually gaining around upon their heavy exhaust of fire, though the tiger seemed each moment to increase his terror at his speed.

They reached the stream, the tiger still a few yards in advance, and, with a tremendous bound, he cast himself into its muddy waters, and made for the opposite bank. The next moment his pursuers, in about the confusion, were struggling after him, and as the tiger (now fearfully exhausted) clambered on the bank, the baboons were at his heels, things many of the pack (the old, the very young, and the feeble) were still struggling in the water for a few moments and had passed from our sight behind the brow of the opposite bank; but their fearful yelling, now authoritatively announced that, still on the tiger had no his doom, and that in a few minutes, a mere quivering limb from limb from limb. As the evening was far advanced, and we were still some miles from home, we did not cross the river to see at the dead but, next morning, a few bones and scattered fragments of flesh and skin, showed what had been the tiger's fate. On our return home we were told by some Dutch gentlemen that such hunts are not uncommon when a tiger is rash enough to attack the young Arkansas, which seldom happens. All these creatures for miles around are shy, and pursue their enemy with relentless fury to death. Sometimes the chase lasts for days, but invariably closes with the death of the tiger—a striking instance that the idea of retribution is not confined to man alone.

NEW ORLEANS OPELOUSAS AND GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

New Orleans, June 1, '61.

Land Department.

THE New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company, by and in virtue of an act of the United States Congress of the 10 June, 1856, and of an act of the State Legislature of the 8 March, 1860, have become the owners of 726,000 acres of land, free from all intermediate or prior claims.

These lands are situated within a strip of 20 miles in width, or 10 miles on each side of the railroad line, extending from Algiers, opposite New Orleans, to the Sabine River, of the eastern boundary of Texas, a distance of 362 miles. In the immediate vicinity of the road from this River, it will traverse the most fertile grain region of the State.

The lands lying opposite the first 120 miles to the navigable [illegible], are in the rich and heavily timbered alluvial valley of the Bayou Teche, Grand Lake and adjacent. Between the 120th and 200th miles we have a very large amount of fertile and valuable lands in the Attakapas prairies, a region unsurpassed for beauty, healthfulness, and fertility of soil.

Between the 180th mile and the Sabine river, the road traverses the Opelousas hilly prairies, between pine woods and cane brakes, and crossing by the very fine streams, good water, rather, and a water shed abounding in fish, are common to this entire region.
