The regiment will winter near Decatur, Ga., where they will remain for a short while to organize and be drilled.

Come forward at once and volunteer, thereby avoiding conscription and avoiding the bounty of skulkers who pass the time idling.

Daily Appeal.

The Siege of Charleston.

The reported assault on Battery Wagner, Tuesday night, ended in repulse, in a heavy fight between the pickets. The enemy advanced in strong force, evidently intending to surprise our pickets and capture the rifle pits. His force is announced to have been between one thousand and fifteen hundred strong, with a battery of light artillery. Our force was only between two and three hundred, consisting of detachments of the 54th Georgia and 6th North Carolina. The fight lasted about an hour, when the Yankees retired, carrying off their dead and wounded. Their loss is believed to have been considerable, as our batteries on James island kept up a heavy fire during the action. Our loss was five killed and nineteen wounded. The 54th Georgia suffered severely.

The following wounded were brought to the city Wednesday morning:

CITADEL SQUARE HOSPITAL.

Private Thos. Dowd, company A, 61st North Carolina.

Private J. M. Anderson, company I, 61st North Carolina.

FIRST GEORGIA HOSPITAL.

Captain A. S. Roberts, company D, 54th Georgia, mortally wounded.

Capt. A. J. Moore, company F, 61st North Carolina, severely.

Private T. J. Eason, company B, 54th Georgia.

Private John S. Moore, company B, 54th Georgia.

Private Isaac B. Lamb, company C, 54th Georgia.

Private Wm. Greiner, company D, 54th Georgia.

Private Wm. Oglesby, company C, 54th Georgia.

Private Wiley Cartese, company B, 54th Georgia.

Private C. C. Newtown, company A, 61st North Carolina.

Private Richard Grimsley, company E, 61st North Carolina.

Private J. F. Fowler, company D, Charleston battalion.

In the afternoon one of the monitors moved up and opened fire on Battery Gregg, with an occasional shot at Sumter. Battery Gregg replied, several shots taking effect. The engagement was continued about an hour and a half, when the monitor retired.

About half past six, last evening, very heavy firing was commenced, and we hope in by several heads. The commandant succeeded in severely any boarding party. Official dispatches were received at a late hour last night, but up to press, with an overwhelming majority against and another assault was anticipated.

At a late hour the dispatches announced that the enemy had succeeded in capturing extensive line of rifle pits. I was reported, however, that our loss had been trifling, and the pits retaken. Very heavy and continuous discharges of musketry were heard about the city, and it was believed that the engagement had been renewed.

We received no further particulars of affair on Morris island up to twelve o'clock last night.—Courier, 27th.

Editorial Correspondence Savannah Republican.

CHARLESTON, August 25, 1863.

There are good reasons for the belief that the secret design so early and calmly charged of their programme for the reduction of Charleston. When Gillmore succeeded in the force in Beaufort, the Yankees and Wagner were fit to be taken in a few days, by a few days. It was very part and parcel of the long game of the Yankees, which he proved himself so capable of carrying on as any other to his illustrious predecessor. For reasons, which I am not at liberty to give, it is more believe that it is the intention of Gillmore to abandon the siege of Sumter and Wagner at an enormous expenditure of labor and ammunition. Rather have given the city symptom of a fall or evacuation. The horrible rumors of a fall, or evacuation, but a more terrible resistance to Yankee hell. Then it was a little impatient of mastery and scurvy, with the latter has received little or no impression from their extraordinary bombardment. The new plan is likely to be a removal of their heavy guns from the batteries now playing on the forts and the opening of a concentration fire on Charleston direct, thus giving up the outposts as impregnable. The events of to-night will but confirm those in this decision.

Immediately after dark, the Yankees, in large force, were repulsed in the approaching Battery Wagner, with the view, it is supposed, of making a final attempt to carry the work by assault. Our men were wide awake and prepared for them. No particulars of the engagement have been received, and I have kept up to a late hour with the hope of hearing something definite, but it has been ascertained, from official dispatches, that the advancing columns pressed forward to within a few hundred yards of the fort, when the latter, aided materially by our James' island batteries, opened a deadly fire upon them, mowing them down like grass. It was too terrible for the assailants, and they retired in confusion and dismay. At last accounts a cessatory fire of musketry was kept up, probably between the pickets of the respective armies. It is believed that the repulse was bloody and decided, and that it will settle the fact that Wagner cannot be taken, except by better troops than the Yankees and negroes.

The present garrison of Battery Wagner consists of the 54th Georgia, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Morgan Rawls (Col. Way is absent, but was expected back to-night), the 61st N. Carolina, the Charleston battalion, and a detachment of about one hundred and twenty-five artillerists. General Hagood is in command, but Col. Harrison, of the 63d Georgia, was sent over to relieve him and arrived there just after the fight. The 63d Georgia, of Colquitt's command, has gone over about a week from James island to relieve the garrison should some such account.

I stand go down in the morning and obtain full particulars of the engagement, if possible.

The noble and gallant garrison of Fort Sumter—the 1st regiment S. C. regulars, Col Alfred Rhett—have been long, arduous and successful services, with the exception of one company, relieved to night. Their places are supplied by a force, all picked men, detached from the 27th and 46th Georgia regiments, respectively, commanded by Capt. Edwards of the 27th and Wertzner of the 46th, the latter being senior officer. I was among three gallant veterans as they marched out of the wharf to angel, proudly, to their departure on the steamer. And I may say without exaggeration, that a finer and more regimental body of troops has left for no fortress in the world. Most of them volunteered for this purpose, knowing it would seem delightful to the Yankees, and expecting a rule to reach they are expected, especially as there is every indication of an assault by one or three in a week. It is an interest, I believe, that Fort Sumter is to be a "hard nut" for the Yankees.

There has been no firing on the city since Sunday night, but many are of the opinion, that some of the guns meant to be the Lookout, and that the commander has deemed them than a rose in the government. Although it is, that the 100 shots gave forth a very peculiar hiss, and which we had heard of the shell in the city. Nevertheless, the occasion of the fire, which has already been quite pretty, is likely to be a removal of their heavy guns from the batteries now playing on the fort
