THE GREAT WESTERN TERRITORIES.

Their vast Wealth and Resources—Utah—Montana—Nevada—Colorado.

When peace shall have resumed its sway in our country, the national mind will be turned more strongly than ever to the peopling of our vast domain and the development of the vast resources o auriferous, fossiliferous, and oleaginous wealth which nature has stored among the ribs of the mountains and along the great basins of the American continent. As the star of empire takes its way westward, in fulfilment of Bishop Berkeley's grand poetic prophecy, the yield of the precious deposits will doubtless continue to increase with new discoveries until America shall be recognized as the great depository of hidden treasures and the commercial center of the world. Let us look at the fields of wealth already developed or known to exist, and the character of the territory yet to be swept by the advancing waves of population.

THE GREAT WESTERN PLATEAU.

This great plateau, embraced between the Sierra Navada and the Sierra Madre chains of mountains and their prolongations, and, stretching four thousand miles in length, has an area of two million square miles, an altitude of six thousand feet, and contains three great rivers. It is subdivided into seven great basins by connecting ranges, two of which are within the Mexican territory. The others are the basins of the Rio Del Norte, the Colorado, the Salt Lake, the Columbia, and the Fraser. Through nearly two thousand miles of this vast plateau the Del Norte and its confluents afford a practical route for a grand central railroad, which will at no distant period connect the northern and southern regions of country and aid in developing their riches. The climate of the plateau is genial and nearly uniform, and its soils are highly fertile. A dry and clear atmosphere tends to preserve the crops of grasses and other animal sustenances, and fish, fowls, and other kinds of food for man are found in abundance. A natural system of irrigation lessens the labor of man in tillage, and the region affords abundant facilities for a dense population. Gold abounds throughout the plateau, and the mines of coal, quarries of marble, and other secret riches lie waiting for the hand of man.

THE SIERRA MADRE.

The Sierra Madre, or Mother Mountain of the World, rising from a base of nearly two thousand miles, and dividing the continent, is pre-eminently primeval. Its core is the primitive rock, quartz. Scooped from its main mass are beautiful valleys of great size, known among the trappers by the name of "parks."

COLORADO TERRITORY.

Four of these "parks" are in Colorado Territory, which has yet been little exploded or settled, although it is now in the center of that isothermal zone, which is considered as the belt of the world's civilization. But the great column of population—which has already climbed a foothold on the fertile terraces surrounding the Salt Lake and upon the Upper del Norte and the Fraser rivers—will not be long in establishing itself throughout the Colorado Territory and planting there the laws and institutions of the Republic. Some description, therefore, of these Colorado "parks," which are to be the home of millions of American citizens, will be interesting. They are designated as the North, Middle, South and San Louis Parks, and are of equal size, lying in close proximity to each other. Their features are so strikingly similar that a description of one of them will give a very good idea of all. The San Louis Park which is the most southern, is of an elliptical form, its southern end extending within the Territory of New Mexico. This park has a smooth area of nine thousand four hundred square miles. It is encircled by a continuous chain of mountains, whose crests reach the regions of perpetual snow. It is evidently the drained bowl of a primeval inland sea, and in conformation bears a marked resemblance to some of the lake basins enclosed by the Alps. The San Louis plain is six thousand feet above the level of the sea; and surrounding peaks rise to more than double that altitude. Between these peaks and the plain are mountainous undulations, among which numerous streams have their sources. Nineteen of these streams descend from the north into the Sawatch Lake, which is a fresh water, which has no outlet. The remaining area is watered by the Del Norte, which passes through the Park from its western to its southern border. Roads enter the Park on all sides by easy passes through the mountains. From the summits of these eminences the whole area is embraced in one view. The four Parks embrace a region of territory in the center of Colorado two hundred miles wide and four hundred miles long, and are divided one from another by the sweeping curves of the great mountain chain. In each Park rises a great river flowing alternately to the Atlantic and Pacific. These Parks have the same level as the great American plateau, and possess to a great extent its peculiar characteristics. Their plains are formed of the mountain abrasions, and consequently the eastern half partakes of the nature of the Cordillera, and the western half the qualities of the Sierra Madres, each affording a smooth surface and remarkable fertility. Remote from the oceans and of mountain altitude, and encircled by eternal snows, the atmosphere is salubrious and invigorating. Throughout the year a temperate heat prevails at noon, and a cool temperature at midnight. The light clouds incessantly forming about the summits of the Sierra, rarely intercept the rays of the sun. The great mountains are alternately covered with dense forests of pine, fir, spence, and aspen, and with meadows of luxuriant and nutritious grasses. These grasses, growing rapidly during the annual melting of the snows, are cured into hay upon the atmosphere becomes dry again, and thus furnish perennial pastures for the wild cattle, which everywhere abound, supplying by spontaneous production meat, dairy food, hides, wool, and kindred elements. The descending mountain streams irrigate the plain, and by their aid the soil produces all the cereals and fruits known to European settlers. The streams and lakes abound in fish and water fowl of great variety and excellence. Native poultry are scattered over the mountains and plains, and the multitude and variety of aboriginal game birds are astonishing. All domestic animals known to us become readily acclimated there. Facilities for the economical prosecution of manufacturing are plentiful; wood and coal are easily accessible, and markets are now to be found in the adjacent mining regions of Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF COLORADO.

The most important country of Colorado Territory is Arapaho, from its position as a central point from which radiate the chief roads to other parts of the great western country, and from the fact that the most important town of the Territory, Denver City, is here located. The county is situated on the eastern slope of the South Platte river, at its junction with Cherry creek, and contains an improved area of about six hundred square miles, and a population of twenty-five to thirteen thousand. Denver City, the county seat, first settled at so recent a date as eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, contains seven thousand five hundred of this population, and is the commercial center of the Territory, in which its important banking business is transacted. From it there is daily conveyance by coaches to the principal mining districts in the Rocky Mountain region. It is but ten days' travel from New York, by railroad to Atchison, on the Missouri, and six hundred and twenty miles staging. Gilpin county, lying west of Arapaho, is the next in importance. Central City, its principal town, with the population engaged in mining and milling operations, in its immediate neighborhood, numbers about twelve thousand inhabitants. In this county center the active gold-mining operations of the Territory, and it contains within its limits about three hundred and fifty mills of all sizes and descriptions. Twenty-four millions of dollars in gold were yielded by the Gilpin and Clear Creek mines in eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and the wealth of the district is continually being developed by the opening of new mines. Nearly all the other counties of the State are rich in metals and minerals, gems and medical springs. Thus Clear Creek county abounds in lands of gold-bearing quartz, hot and cold soda springs, and wonderful mines of precious stones, which are said to be found in almost fabulous quantities. As many as twenty-seven different articles of valuable gems have been found in this county, all susceptible of the highest polish. Jefferson county, the population of which is mainly agricultural, contains immense quarries of limestone and marble, and immense beds of coal. Gold is also found here to some extent. The marble is of a similar appearance to the Tennessee marble in the capitol at Washington. Iron ores are also found in abundance. Summit and Lake counties, though as yet but partially explored, are known to be rich in metalliferous deposits; and the counties of Costella and Conegos are already famous for their productive silver mines and wonderful hot springs. It is believed that the treasures embosomed in the soil of Colorado are inexhaustible, and that when their magnitude shall become fully known the tide of population will flow thither with unexampled volume, and speedily give Colorado rank as one of the most powerful States of the Union. The present population of the Territory, excluding Indians, is about sixty-eight thousand.

UTAH TERRITORY.

The physical aspect of this territory is mountainous. Its valleys, which are industriously cultivated by the Mormon population, are rendered fertile by irrigation. Several towns have been started on the streams and in the valleys, one of which, called the city of Stockton, in Rush Valley, is a place of great thrift and promise. Valuable mines of gold, silver, copper, and coal are being developed in the Territory, and extensive hot sulphur springs flow from the base of the Wasatch mountains into the great Salt Lake. Salt Lake City, which has increased in population during the past two years, now numbers about fifteen thousand inhabitants, and is the seat of a large commercial, manufacturing, and banking business. It contains a cotton mill, woolen factory, iron foundry, nail factory, flour and sorghum mills; and, for the enjoyment of the Saints, a fine theater, which cost two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Utah Territory contains a population of between one hundred and ten and one hundred and fifteen thousand.

MONTANA TERRITORY.

The chief town of Montana Territory is Virginia City, which contains a population of about ten thousand—about one-third of the whole inhabitants of the Territory—and is located in the heart of the gold placer diggings, whose products, during the last two seasons, is estimated at millions. The Territory has a large amount of arable land, and is watered by many streams from the mountains. The valleys of the Missouri and Yellowstone, in the eastern portion of the Territory, are especially rich. The Yellowstone is navigable to vessels of light draught for several hundred miles.

NEVADA.

In this new State lies the rich silver-mining region of Reese river, not yet fully developed. At Virginia City the great silver mills, one hundred in number, are in constant activity, crushing the crude ore with the resistless power of their five hundred huge stamps, and producing a deafening sound, heard for miles. The population of the State, now numbering about eighty thousand, are mostly engaged in mining, or in working the silver mills.

OTHER WESTERN REGIONS.

With the topographic features of California, Oregon and Washington most of our readers are probably already quite familiar. The vast and accumulating wealth of the Golden State, with its capacious harbors and navigable streams, and the agricultural regions and immense timber forests of Oregon and Washington, give great importance to those sections of our magnificent Western empire.

THE OLDER STATES.

Looking East of the Mississippi, we find there also new fields for enterprise. The States are yet young in vigorous enterprise. The coal fields of Pennsylvania yield to the extending operations of the miner a large annual increase. The production of anthracite and bituminous coal last year is estimated at the enormous total of 15,700,000 tons, worth in the aggregate at the mines, $82,200,000. The iron product of the Keystone State last year was 700,000 tons of pig iron, 200,000 tons, and nearly 200,000 tons of railroad iron were made in the State during that time, while the enormous forges of Lackawanna are swell the vast product of labor. Nor is this all; for, to use the language of Mr. Everett, in his last public speech, "the very clods of the earth are 'pouring out rivers of oil,' and creating a new interest, which is rising rapidly to a rivalry with the the mineral enterprises. During the last year the export of petroleum to foreign countries was equal to one million five hundred thousand barrels in its crude state; and this, it is estimated, was but little more than half of the production of the wells. With new fountains of oil opening every day, no limit can be set to the supply, and no estimate can be made of the immense wealth which Pennsylvania holds in the inexhaustible richness of her soil. Others of the old States, though not so rich in the products of the earth as Pennsylvania, are yet adding many millions annually to the national production by their harvests of metals, minerals and oil. The large veins of the copper mines of Michigan are well known. West Virginia and Ohio, which have hitherto had coal and iron in abundance, are now beginning to supply petroleum in great abundance. Indiana, in the language of the Petroleum Exchange, has just "struck oil," and nearly every State west of the Alleghanies has its beds of iron and coal. Beneath the surface of the mines, the forests, and the arable soil of our gigantic domain, to what heights of commercial greatness and what measure of independent wealth may not our country shade, when the bonds of her sons, no longer turned against each other, shall be employed in the grand common object of national progress.

RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted by a Convention of Colored People at Mobile, Nov. 22, 1865.

WHEREAS, Under the providence of a gracious God, the colored people of the United States are permitted to enjoy the blessings of a free country and liberty, and now have the privilege of demonstrating what they can do as a people; and

WHEREAS, The unprecedented privilege is now granted us of peacefully assembling in convention, as did this city of Mobile, and conferring and deliberating upon matters involving our common interests; therefore

Resolved, That we shall ever inculcate the truth that our freedom is the gift of God, and that we are under the highest obligations to Him so to improve our new privilege as that His gift shall not be in vain.

Resolved, That we shall labor to foster in the hearts of our people sentiments of peace, friendship and good will towards all men—especially towards our white fellow-citizens among whom our lot is cast; and while we would relinquish none of the rights of our common manhood, we would studiously, according to our best knowledge and ability, so conduct ourselves as to be profitable to them and to ourselves.

Resolved, That we know and admit the fact that labor, faithfully and judiciously performed, is the only just foundation of wealth, and that it will continue to be our purpose and effort to work industriously and honestly for the support of our families and the prosperity of the community in which we live.

Resolved, That we will perform faithful labor for every man who will pay us just wages, nor do we either expect or desire to receive any man's property without giving him a just equivalent.

Resolved, That we feel that our new condition of freedom not only presents new motives to industry, but also imposes new obligations upon us to cultivate all the virtues of good citizenship, and that, therefore, it is our purpose to fulfill all the duties of our new position according to the ability which God has given us.

Resolved, That we recognize civil government as an ordinance of God, and that it shall be a matter of conscience with us to obey the laws, and to discountenance in every way all violation and all contempt of civil authority.

Resolved, That the assertion made in certain quarters, that there is a plot among our people to rise in insurrection, is utterly without foundation, inconsistent with our history as a people, and the farthest from our desires or possible intentions.

Resolved, That we feel in our hearts the glow of gratitude and the purpose of unfaltering fidelity to the Government of the United States, and shall ever regard as pledged to its support our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

Resolved, That we regard the education of our children and youth as vital to the preservation of our liberties, and true religion as the foundation of all real virtue, and shall use our utmost endeavors to promote these blessings in our common country.

E. S. WINN,
President of the Convention.
J. S. HOLMES, Secretary.

☞ When President Johnson was informed that Kentucky was garrisoned by twenty thousand colored troops, enlisted since the war's termination, he ordered the withdrawal and disbandment of the larger portion, stating that martial law at the expense of twenty millions a year, was too expensive a luxury for Kentucky.

☞ The following words are addressed to Gen. Kilpatrick at a mass meeting of the Republicans, at Brooklyn, N. Y.: "This man must die, because he was the head of the rebellion! He must die upon the scaffold! Let England protest! Let Italy remonstrate! Let the South-ern States send in their petitions! But that man (Mr. Davis) must die!"

RESOLUTIONS.

The recent war of the rebellion has created a great number and variety of claims, the holders of which, as well as the Government, wish to adjust with the least possible promptness.

All persons having such claims against the Government, and wishing their speedy adjustment, will do well to forward them immediately to this Agency for collection. Little difficulty or expense need be encountered by any applicant.

The attention of this office will be directed to the prosecution and collection of every variety of claims against the United States in all departments of the Government. We are now most successfully prosecuting claims and recovering prompt payment of same from the Government of the United States for Horses and Mules Impressed; Hay, Corn and Forage of all kinds; Wood and Lumber; Bacon, Flour and other Provisions; Beef Cattle, Hogs, etc.; Hire of Teams; Timber for Bridges and Railroads; Irregular Claims against the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments of the United States, for supplies furnished the army, whether Claimants have or have not vouchers or receipts for the same.

We Collect claims for Loss of Steamboats, Skows, Skiffs, etc.; for Furniture, Cotton or other Produce seized by the Military or Treasury authorities; for Extra Pay and Commutation of Rations due Prisoners of War; for Rent of House, etc.; Suspended Pension Claims; Army and Navy Back Pay; Prize Money, Pensions of all Kinds; Bounties; Soldiers' Check-Books; Officers' Back Pay; Settlement of Officers' Accounts; Arrears of Stoppages; Horses Lost, Killed, Captured or Condemned in the Service; Erroneous Arrests, etc.

Claims for the four cents per pound paid on cotton previous to shipment; also, the tax on goods imported into Tennessee; Claims for Land Damages, etc., before Congress; and claims of loyal owners of negro slaves who resided in the Union army during the late rebellion for the amount and bounty provided by act of Congress.

This Agency, we flatter ourselves, offers advantages superior to any local agency, being located at the Federal Capital, thus allowing ready investigation of difficulties, cases, and dispatch in the collection of claims. And our long Experience in the collection of Government claims and familiarity with the forms of office and all the departments of the National Government, give us great facilities for the successful prosecution of all claims entrusted to us.

Our Mr. Combs will gratuitously see to all the courts of the city of Memphis and county, and the Federal court for the District of West Tennessee. Lawyers, Claim Agents and others having claims for collection in this and adjoining States, will find it to their advantage to send them to us.

Fees shared with professional men entrusting Business with us.

Any claims entrusted to us will be promptly attended and vigorously prosecuted.
