MEMPHIS APPEAL.

THE CLOSING SCENE.

BY T. S. READ.

The following is pronounced by the Worcester Spy to be unquestionably the finest American poem ever written:

Within the sober realms of leafless trees,
The russet year inhaled the dreamy air;
Like some tanned reaper in his hour of ease,
When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray barns looking from their hazy hills,
Of the dun waters wildering in the vales,
Sent down the air a greeting to the mills,
On the dull tinnitus of accordant bells.

All sights were mellowed, and all sounds subdued,
The hills seemed further and the streams sang low;
As in a dream the distant woodman heard
His winter log, with many a muffled blow.

The embalmed forests, strewn like carved with gold,
Their tapestry bright with every martial line,
Were stiff, like some proud, dead, banished lord of old,
Withdrawn afar in Time's remotest line.

On sombre wing, the vulture tried his flight;
The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint;
And, like a star slow drowning in the light,
The village church vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel cock upon the hillside crew—
Crew thrice—and all was stiller than before;
Silent, until some sighing wanderer blew
His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where oft the jay within the elm's tall crest,
Made garrulous trouble round her unfledged young;
And where the oriole hung her swaying nest,
By every light wind like a cradle swung;

Where, among the noisy martins of the eaves,
The busy swallows circled ever near—
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
An early harvest and a plenteous year;

Where every bird that waked the vernal feast,
Shunned the sweet slumber from its wings at noon,
To warn the reaper of the rosy east;
All now was voiceless, empty and forlorn.

Alone, from out the stubble, piped the quail;
And startled the crow through all the dreary glens;
Alone, the pleasant, drumming in the vale,
Stole with a line the timeless cottage loom.

There was no sound of life, no bloom upon the bowers;
The spiders spread their frilly shrouds by night;
The thistle-down, the only ghost of flowers,
Passed wholly by—passed noiselessly out of sight.

And all this—in this most dreary air,
And where the woodbine shed upon the porch
Its crimson leaves, as if the year shed there,
Firing the floor with its inverted torch.

And all this—the center of the scene,
The white-haired matron, with monotonous tread,
Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyless mein,
Sat like a fate, and wound the flying thread.

She had known sorrow—he had walked with her
Oft stopped, and broke with her the silen spell;
But the dead leaves still she heard the stir
Of his thick mantle trailing in the dell.

Yet—yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom,
Her story unmoved and she gave her all;
And when she ceased, he had her husband slumbered,
Revealing the secret to rust upon the wall.

He gave the sword, but not the hand that drew
And struck for liberty the dying blow;
He gave, he did, in life and country true,
Fell into the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the drooping wheel went on,
Like the low murmur of a hive at noon;
Long, but not loud, the memory of the one
Breathed through her lips a sad and mournful tune.

At last the thread was snapped—her head was bare,
Like frosted the distaff through her hands;
And long neighbors unwatched her careful chair,
While death and winter closed the autumn scene.
