MEMPHIS APPEAL.

CALHIER'S ADDRESS.

As some strong bark that long and sternly braved,
The gales that swept the wide ocean'dreamed,
Returns, from every danger saved,
To anchor in its wished-for port of rest,
Comes the APPEAL, its duty done past,
Back to its friends and native place at last.

How vexed it wandered, and how far it fled,
To other seas the story must belong;
What dangers braved by waters running red,
May live in history—perhaps in song.
Pinion-rained war was on its flying track,
Yet peace returned and sweetly smiled it back.

Wherever it fared, all panting from the flight,
It heard the swift pursuer's bugle horn;
Not long delayed, the distant glare at night,
Told where the foe would gather on the morn;
What plains world tremble and what hills would shake,
What heroes fail, what manly hearts would break.

Four years it lived, though death was all around;
The raging tide and the bursting shell
Told pealing valor prone upon the ground,
And hurled the hands in sorrow, but too well;
Still, over the ashes of each trampled thing,
The phoenix—"the spirit of liberty" spread its wing.

Dear Sunny South! land of the trailing vine,
Where paradise descends and smiles through blood!
Whatever is fair and peerless, all is thine—
The wreaths that marthy beauty, all are ours.
Where on the North the breezes barely breathed its breath,
The hand of man hath sown the seeds of death.

Thy fields, that gave the quick and golden fruit
That ripens in the track of enterprise,
Are thick with weeds, a fowl for the brute,
The grave where battled hope in vain lies;
There hath contention's fierce and thundering war
Left its fell trace, the gaping grave of war.

Fair, but not strong, brave, but in numbers few,
Sighed her challenge to the scattering foes;
And from her ranks to fatal thinness grew,
And distant regions still came pouring forth.
Long the struggle made! How thick her pallas fell!
How rang her sabres! 'twas her Waterloo!

No more her flag o'er bleeding fields shall float,
Or pulse round her capitol so bold!
Over its tomb shrouds a grating world shall gloat,
As of the hands that bore it was not cold.
To rise no more, with that which gave it birth,
Its bed shall be the trampled dust of earth.

How swift they fell! friends so beloved—so true!
The very flowers of truth and chivalry!
The shadow earth was on their bosoms swept,
While yet the carnage held its revelry!
The daisy, rooted in their breasts shall bloom:
The rose and violet there contend for room.

How spread the silver o'er each manly head,
How gathered youth into the arms of age,
How pale grew cheeks that once were round and red,
Shall all be told on some historic page.
The years were only four, but oh, their cost!
All else beside the immortal soul, was lost!

The frozen hill where night the soldier caught,
And held in cold embrace our dead, all morn,
Was not with deeper, deadlier anguish fraught,
Than where the weeping wife's pale embers burned;
Above her knees the hands of childhood clung,
While hunger plead upon each tenderlooms.

Ruin was everywhere—the arctic night,
Descended on its isles forever drear,
Long moonless days, "death in Northern Light,
Told sends a spectral aspect to all Far;
Than this fair clime, it left not a single cry of pain
Escapes the child. A half suppressed sob or two succeeds, then a sweet smile breaks through its tears, that sparkle like jewels flashing in the glorious sunlight. Anon the cheerful laugh is resumed. The young mother surprises me in my gambols with the elf. She clips her hands and laughs with thatsame silvery, cheerful laugh that captivated my heart long ago. But she cruelly takes the baby from me, and whilst she dresses it for an out door airing, she more cruelly reminds me of the time, when she herself had flaxen hair and pure skyey eyes, whose spiritual gentleness and glory would have been the pride of an Austrian Princess. There is a tinge of mischief in that reference, because, her auburn hair and ethereal eyes are as beautiful now as angels; and there is, in all her arch smiles, a pitying reference to my condition of single blessedness. (?) How often I longed to tell her how I had looked so much into her eyes that their gentle light became the cherished sunshine of my heart. I've been very happy in its genial influence, and am very sad that I have been so slow and foolish as to have failed to tell her, as she took to her heart a noble man, who loves and cherishes her perhaps even more than I did.

But now baby is ready to take the streets. What a picture it is. What an exquisite halo of beauty envelopes its face like a mere envelopes its hook on its mystery. There are floating of shoulders, and ribbons glimpses of over its arms. There are bow wow gold clasps and fastenings all over at its neck and bosom, and parts of queer fixings gathered on its body. It is an odd study for me to view so many odds and ends that are needed to make up baby's dress. But its mother's eyes express her unbounded delight and pleasure, as she walks proudly along and by her watchfulness and care, indicates that she is the mamma of that live and wonderfully beautiful baby.

The rough cart man, as he passes, smiles and forgets to whip his horse, as he whistles a chirrup to the little one. The business man, as he hurries past, bestows an admiring glance on the beautiful treasure. The poor woman, in weeds, wistfully, and fearfully looks at it, as she, sobbing, walks away. The richly dressed lady bends down to admire it, and is attracted by its smile. The amiable looking fat gentleman stops and chucks it under the chin, then walks on more amiable, and smiling and genial than before. The angry man catches a glimpse of its wonderful eyes; he hesitates, looks again into the ethereal bright of their clear depths, and with a blush that tells how strangely the mystic influence of loveliness stirs the heart, he relaxes his brow, and goes by blessing the scene that dispelled his gloom. The shop keeper gives it a choice piece of candy, and compliments the mother. The little children, even the boys, stop the nurse to let them kiss and caress the sweet, darling baby.

That baby has made a continuous conquest during all our afternoon ramble, and now that we are at home, it is as cheerful and amiable as a dove. I kiss it, and lingering, caress it, before they put it away from my sight into its basket cradle. Now that it is gone, I feel as if a bright ray of heavenly light had been shut out from my heart.

Slumber, gentle baby, slumber like the rose, When the air is warm, lull it to repose; Angels hover o'er thee—softly seal thine eyes, Wait for spirit guard, to the smiling skies.

Oh! What joy and happiness cluster round the presence of a dear, beautiful baby. What a glorious bright light of the household is the baby. What a volume of heart pleasure gathers about and center in it. What a lovely link it is in the golden chain that binds the true husband and pure wife together. Blessed is the presence of the baby, and thrice blessed are the parents who appreciate the precious blessing.—Dr. Nagle.

MACON, GA., 1865.

AN ELOQUENT EXTRACT.

The following is from a speech delivered by Hon. Alex. White, in the Alabama State Convention:

"Mr. President—The bonnie blue Flag no longer reflects the light of the morning; Sunbeams, or kisses with its silken folds the genial breeze of our Southern clime. The hands that waved it along the fiery crest of a hundred battle fields—and the hearts that, for the love they bore it, so often defied danger, and death—no longer rally around it. Another banner waves in triumph over its closed and prostrate folds, but proud memories and glorious recollections cluster around it. Sir, I will refrain. The South needs no eulogy. The faithful record of her achievements will encircle her brow with glory bright and enduring as the diadem that crowns the night of her cloudless skies. The scenes of Marathon and Platea have been re-enacted in the New World without the benificent results which flow from those battle fields of freedom, and our country lies prostrate at the feet of the conqueror. But dearer to me is she in this hour of humiliation than was she in the day and hour of her pride and her power. Each blood stained field, each track of devastation, each new made grave of her sons fallen in her defense, each mutilated form of the Confederate soldier—her widow's tear, her orphan's cry—are but so many cords that bind me to her in the midst of her desolation, and draw my affection closer around my stricken country. When I raise my voice or lift my hand against her, may the live thunder live me where I stand! Though I be false in all else, I will be true to her. Though all others may prove faithless, I will be faithful still. And when, in obedience to the command, "Dust to dust," my heart shall return to that earth from whence it sprung, it shall sink into her bosom with the proud consciousness that it never knew one beat not in unison with the honor, the interests, the glory of my country."

A STRANGE COINCIDENCE.

An old friend of Gov. Corwin, and who was present on the evening when the gifted Corwin was struck down, writes to the Columbus Journal, in a letter describing the scene, as follows:

When, at last, the press about him lessened, I sat down by his side. What he happened first to say to me furnishes one of those strange coincidences which go to impress our lives, with a tinge of the mysterious and awful, and which makes us superstitious. One of his first utterances to me was a startling description of what Gov. Corwin was to be in twenty-five minutes after its utterance. It was this: He said, "You are more bald than when I saw you the last day before I sailed from Mexico." I said "Yes." He said, with the semisolemn, semicomical face which has become historical, "But, then, Julius Cesar was bald." I said, "But Cesar has fits." Then he assumed a more serious manner, and said, "Twenty years ago I saw a man fall in apparently unconscious paralysis when in the midst of excited discourse. He was carried out by his friends in this condition, and his first act of consciousness was to utter the words you have just said:

"Cesar had fits!"

In twenty-five minutes after, I assisted in carrying Corwin out in the precise condition he had so strangely described.

☞It can be stated that a respectable minority, if not an actual majority, of the members of the Finance and Ways and Means Committee of the Senate and House are strongly in favor of the repeal of the income section of the tax law, and in lieu thereof, imposition of a tax on sales, which at one per cent. will produce a revenue of one hundred and twenty million of dollars, out of receipts for rents, dividends, upon stocks and other justly taxable emoluments, a similar tale of one per cent; with the specific taxes upon spirituous, malt and vinous liquors, and upon tobacco in its various forms, a further additional sum may be realized, equal to the highest figure at which our present complex, unequal and vexatious system of taxation is put by its advocates. It may be proper to state, in this connection, that the Secretary of the Treasury, and at least one of the commissioners appointed to revise the revenue laws, are in favor of this system.
