MEMPHIS APPEAL.

ABOUT HUSBANDS.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

A man is in general better pleased when he has a good dinner upon his table than when his wife speaks Greek.—Sam Johnson.

Johnson was right. I don't agree to all
The solemn dogmas of the rough and stager;
But surely much superior was he one may call
The minor morals of the "Urse Major."

Johnson was right. Although some men adore
Wisdom in woman, and will marry cram
Her,
There isn't one in ten but thinks far more
Of his owl-grub than of his spouse's grammar.

I know it is the greater shame in life;
But who among them have, perhaps, myself,
Returning hungry home, but asks his wife
What—not her book—she has upon her shelf

Though Greek and Latin be the lady's boast,
They're little valued by the lord of mate;
The kind of tongue that husbands relish most
Is modern, boiled, and served upon a plate.

Or if, as fond ambition may command,
Some home-made verse the happy matron
show him,
What mortal spouse but from her dainty hand
Would sooner see a pudding than a poem?

Young lady—deep in love with Tom or Harry—
Wish all to tell you sweet is the marriage
But here's the moral of it—don't ye marry;
Or, marrying take your lover as he is—

A very man, with something of the brute
Underlying the grove a sentimental mollyg,
With passions strong, and appetite to boot—
A thirsty soul within a hungry body!

A very man—not one of Nature's clods—
With human feelings, whether saint or sinner;
Endowed, perhaps, with genius from the gods,
But apt to take his temper from his dinner.

A FRENCH PREACHER.

A Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, (England,) thus speaks of a French preacher who has risen up to astound by his eloquence the people of that gay capital:

Each Sunday of late the Cathedral of Paris witnesses an immense crowd collected to hear the sermon of a new preacher called Father Hyacinthe. The ablest speakers in the two Chambers, the most respected Judges, the most learned writers, all go to hear the powerful language and merried reasoning of the new pulpit orator. The France now devotes an article to the subject, and explains in what consists the preacher's success: Father Hyacinthe, it says, "worthily continues that school of Christian preachers, who, in taking the dogmas of the Church as the inflexible starting point of their instruction, have adapted the method, the transition and the whole external form of their discourses to the state of men's minds, to the moral requirements of society, and to the very nature of the ideas which they had to enlighten. Lacordaire was used to speak in presence of a generation still impregnated with the theories of Voltaire, the influence of which he had himself undergone. He had arrived at faith by the way of liberty; and his ardent language, in which all the emotions of the new France vibrated with so much force, was admirably suited to the liberal and truth loving generation which philosophy is destined to bring back to spiritualism, thus making a nearer approach to Christianity. At the present day there has arisen a school in morals, in politics and in literature. In politics, this school is called Gleasism. It is neither liberal nor Christian; it insists on authority, and is at the same time revolutionary; and, instead of drawing from the democratic sovereignty, which it invokes, a principle of order, it only extracts from it the reign of force, representing the power of numbers. In order to annihilate the moral energy of a people. In philosophy, this school, which sacrifices liberty to revolution, raises its head superbly, but only to deny and insult God, after having bowed down under the yoke of force. This school acknowledges no master except upon earth. Submissive and supple in politics, it only revolts against the Gospel, which it tears up in affirming the rights of man.

There are, we know, some honorable exceptions; but we speak here of the general tendencies of a school, and not of a few brilliant personalities. Literature is but the expression of manners and ideas; and the school which in philosophy separates itself from the fundamental thought of all religions, which in politics absorbs in State despotism the soul and spirit of a nation, was naturally led, in the productions of art and literature, to sacrifice the moral to the material sense, and spiritualism to realism. And the whole of this disorderly movement is incompletely summed up in the adventurous formula, "independent morality." It is this formula which Father Hyacinthe has attacked with all the power of an immovable conviction, and of an admirable talent. In this new combatant there is not found neither the excitement which the fiery diction of Lacordaire created among his liberal auditory, nor the magisterial gravity and studied reserve of Lavigman in presence of hearers more addicted to reasoning than to enthusiasm. Father Hyacinthe is an athlete of the first order. He descends into the arena armed with all its weapons; he attacks his adversaries in front, disencerts them by the multiplicity of his resources, dazzles them by the splendor of his demonstrations, and prevails over them by his science and reasoning. His method and philosophy nourishes his discourses with the best subject matter of all the great christian authors. His ardent faith heats up his powerful logic, and passes, which is the true inspiration of eloquence, breaking out over and shine through the visible reserve which it imposes on him, then explodes in magnificent bursts of language. In this book, who has so suddenly emerged from his cloister, we find the spirit of the oblivion serving admiraby the faith of the priest. Father Hyacinthe does not come to set up the traditions of the middle ages in opposition to the tenacities of the nineteenth century. His force lies in the fact that he is a man of his own time.

☞ The stories of the letter writers in the South to Northern journals, are generally so ridiculous as to require no refutation; but the one detailing the brutal neglect with which William Johnson, the brother of the President, was treated, while suffering from an accidental wound, which ultimately caused his death, is so atrociously false, that we are induced to publish a counterstatement from the Galveston Civilian:

The radical papers of the North repeat the story that William Johnson, brother of the President, was allowed to die of neglect, from an accidental wound, because the people of Texas had so much prejudice against the President that they would not assist him. The statement is wholly untrue. Mr. Johnson was wounded by the accidental discharge of his own gun, while hunting. There was no surgeon within many miles. His friends dressed the wound; and neither he nor they thought it dangerous. He conversed with them about as usual. Col. R. M. Brown, late of the Confederate army, hearing of the accident, sent his son, Capt. Milton Brown, to see whether Mr. Johnson required aid. Capt. B. found the old man sinking. He said his wound gave him but little pain, and seemed to think but little of it. Afterwards it grew worse, and when the services of a surgeon was procured, it was too late. Mr. Johnson was in humble circumstances, but had no enemies. On the other hand, his neighbors supplied him with the funds on which he went to Washington, to solicit the appointment of Surveyor of the Customs at Velasco.

Neither is there any prejudice against the President in Texas. On the other hand, every case, almost, of political sympathizers, rejoices that such a man is in the executive chair. We do not know a delegate to the approaching convention who is not the earnest advocate of the President's policy.

☞ The Emperor of Mexico comes into a very property for taking by his father's death. She gets seven hundred and fifty thousand pounds, or about three and a half millions of gulden dollars, which sum is every good consolation for the loss of a father who had lived to a great age. Most of this money is placed solely in her power, and unless the lady is very unlike her prudent papa, she will not waste it in keeping up the Mexican Empire. Royal personages have learnt something of the value of money in the last ninety years, and they can invest it as thriftily as any were qualified to compete with the Rothschilds in the banking business. Empress Charlotte will hold on to the spelter with a fist as tight as it is pretty, and prefer any other investment than Mexican bonds when she settles down to live on her income.

☞ The Paris Journal Des Debats says in an editorial: "We wish Mexico had not become such an embarrassing matter to us, and an obligation, originating in a false point of honor. Let us try to see the serious and actual dangers which threaten the French policy in America, and which make us wish our Government would take one or the other of two resolutions—either boldly augment our army of occupation in Mexico, in order to prepare against adjacent perils, or take counsel as to the most suitable and prompt means for the evacuation of the country."

☞ The following religious notice is from a Nashville paper. One would judge from it the Bishop must have been thoroughly "reconstructed" by the time his numerous friends got through preaching to him: "The numerous friends and admirers of Charles Todd Quintard, Bishop of the Diocese of Tennessee, will present at Christ Church, corner of High and Church streets, on Wednesday, seventeenth instant, at seven P. M."

☞ Five or six guerrillas, says the Mobile Times of the first, were brought to town yesterday and turned over to the tender mercies of the Provost Marshal. They are all Bigbee guerrillas, and more or less concerned in the capture of the Belfast. There has been no disposition made of their case.

R. NICKOLSON, T. R. SAUNDERS, formerly with Quinby & Robinson.

AFTER a suspension of business for nearly four years, we again come before the public, soliciting a share of patronage in the above branches of business in our new buildings, on Shelby street, opposite the Gayoso House. We are prepared to build and repair Saw Mills, Engines, etc.; furnish all kinds of Castings for Buildings, Plantations, Railroads or Steamboats. With an experience of twenty-five years as practical mechanics and machinists, we feel confident in our ability to give satisfaction. Our prices shall be as low as the expense of labor and material will admit of.

Referring to the above notice, the old firm of Quinby & Robinson being dissolved, I would cheerfully recommend the new firm to our old customers and the public, and solicit them to give the new firm a trial, feeling assured they will give all their customers perfect satisfaction.
