Cocoanut Marcons.
To the unbeaten whites of three eggs add a cupful of granulated sugar and beat until thick and light, then add one and a half cupfuls of shredded cocoanut and vanilla to flavor. Drop from the end of a teaspoon in small parts on a buttereed sheet, allowing ample room for spreading, and bake in a very slow even until firm to the touch. These are easily made, inexpensive and delicious.

Brown Bread.

One cupful of sour cream, one cupful of sweet milk, one cupful molasses one teaspoonful each of soda and bak ing powder and one teaspoonful of salt Add enough graham flour to make a labor to be dressed with purity, stiff batter. Lastly add one-half cupful each of seeded raisins and chopped walnuts. Turn into pound baking powder cans and steam two and onehalf hours.

Comforts for the Bed Room. Comparatively few women take time to master the are of being comfortahorse woman and she can ride as ble in the privacy of their own rooms They will argue with their tailor regarding the fit of a new suit. They will track relentlessly the illusive bargain in silks or laces for an evening frock. They will put the eyesight in jeopardy setting dainty stitches into blouses for house wear, but for bedroom comfort they will spend neither time nor money. A seventy-four cent kimono of flimsy material oftimes constitutes a woman's entire bedroom outfit. Now, of a truth, there is no one taing which will so aid her daily pursuit of good looks as the comfo warm, well-fitted yet roomy negligee. If she belongs to the "cold bedroom brigade," this kimono or wrapper should be made from some warm, allwool material, long enough and large enough to wrap round and round her figure when she curls up for a fifteen minute nap. There should be warm slippers to match. This is especially true in the case of the woman who does her own housework. Every afternoon, when the domestic stress lightens, she should shut herself in her bedroom, and, in the most comfortable negligee her purse will afford, enjoy absolute relaxation. Fifteen minutes of absolute comfort will reduce wrinkles, obliterate lines and soften circles under tired eyes. Cream together one pound each of But if she attempts to take this socalled rest without sufficient covering, with chills chasing up and down her spine, it is sheer waste of time. At first sight, the ready-made kimono or negligee is a money-saver. But any woman with a small knowledge of sewing and the use of the patterns will, in the end, save money by making her own bedroom comforts. The average ready-to-wear komono is too long for the woman of medium size, and too narrow for the stout woman. They do admirably for summer wear when made from dotted Swiss, stamped lawns, etc., but in winter the negligee should fit well and be of ample proportions.

For a combination lounging and bathrobe at a reasonable figure, there is nothing better in the way of fabric than eiderdown, which can be bought in various widths and weights. This material works up best in a kimono pattern or on the square, almost shapeless lines of the bathrobe made for men. As it is a fabric which shrinks, due allowance must be made for this in the length of the sleeves and the entire garment. The woman who can afford only one or two negligees or lounging robes must figure on frequent washings, and therefore eschew all material which will not wash,

The finish of the elderdown robe is something of a vexed question. Sometimes the flinish is plain stitching, with frogs across the front, the latter to be taken off when the garment is washed. Again, some women bind the robe with a good quality of ribbon or stik which, with care, will withstand washing. Soutache braid, however, enticing, is not a good trimming, as it pulls in washing, or the fabric may shrink more than the braid. For utilitarian purposes, nothing is better than the plain stitching with a cord or ribbon belt around the waist. Women who can afford to patronize the dry cleaner may indulge in charming combinations for these robes, such as a grey robe bound with golden brown or scarlet ribbon, and bound with a white or scarlet. Grey, red and tan, with white, of course wash best in elderdown. Pink washes better than blue, which generally turns a faded yellowish tint.
