MEMPHIS APPEAL.

FONTENOY.

[1745.]

Thrice at the hour of Fontenoy, the English column failed,
And, twice the lines of Saint Antoine, the Dutch in vain assailed;
For town and slope were filled with foes and flanking batteries rang,
And well they swept the English ranks and cleared the serried files of Ghent,
As vainly through the Barry's wood, the British columns went.
The Frenchmen and their allies drove them back, dismantled and dispersed.
The Belgic Duke and Cumberland beheld with sinking heart
And cursed the hour his last reserve, his latest chance to try!
On Fontenoy! on Fontenoy! how fast his squadrons ride!
And unstanching come his chosen troops, like the Nivelle or Ebro's tide!
Six thousand English veterans in stately column tread,
Their serried lines in front and flank, Lord Hay is at their head;
Steady they step adown the slope—steady they step up the hill;
Steady, they load—steady they fire—moving right onward still,
Through the wood and Fontenoy, as through a Syrian lion,
Through rampart, trench and palisade, and building showering fast;
And on the open plain above, they rose and kept their course,
With steady fire and grim resolve, that mocked at needle force.
Pell Fontenoy, pass Fontenoy, while thinner your ranks grow!
They broke, as broke the Zuyder Zee, through Holland's ocean banks.

More billy than the summer flies, French trailing in rush from wood and fen;
Assistable to the lava tide, French squadrons stirred the ground,
Bombshell and grape, and round shot tore, still on they marched and fired—
Fast, from each volley, grew smaller and valiegur rolled;
"Push on my household cavalry!" King Louis meekly cried;
To death, they rush, but rude their shock—not Marlbrook led the charge!
On through the camp a column trod—King Louis turned his rein.
"Not yet, my liege," Saxe interposed, "the Irish brigade remains!"
And Fontenoy, and Fontenoy, had been at Waterloo,
Were Saxe's exiles ready then, fresh, vehement, and true.

"Lord Clare," he says, "you have your wish, there are your Saxon foes."
The Irish Brigade shout answer to see, so furiously to close!
How proud is the look these exiles wear, who've come to be so gay;
The treasured wrongs of fifty years are in their hearts to-day—
The treaty breaker, are the ink whereewith 'twas signed, dried?
Your plundered homes, their ruined shrines, their women's parting cry,
Their sons, and kinsmen done like wolves, their country overthrown—
Each cooks self revenge for all were staked on this one throw.
On Fontenoy, on Fontenoy, nor ever yet elsewhere, shall foes
Rushed on to fight a nobler band than these exiles were.

O'Brien's valor is known with joy, as halting, he commands,
"Fix bayonets"—"charge!"—like roar lion
Rush on those forty bands!
This is the English column now, and that their guns are silent
Forever grave.
Yet, mind they all the strength they have, they break a gallant charge,
They drive their ranks upon the hill to face that battle wind—
Their bayonets the brook yes foam; like rocks, the men behind!
One volley pours from their lines, when, through the surging smoke,
With empty gun clubbed in their hands, the Irish Irish break.
On Fontenoy, on Fontenoy! back to that fierce times!
"Revenge! Remember Limerick! dash down the Sassenach!"

Like lions leaping at a fold, when mad with hunger, are Right up against the English line the Irish exile rushes!
Right wav their steel, its bloody now, their guns are filled with gore!
Through shattered ranks, and through severed files and trampled flags they bore.
The English stood, with desperate strength, paused, rallied, staggered, fled—
The green hill side is matted close with dying and with dead.
Across the plain, and far away, passed on that broken wave,
While cavalier and fantassin dashed in upon their track,
On Fontenoy, on Fontenoy! like eagles in the sun,
With bloody plumes the exiles stand—the field is fought and won?

From the Round Table.

THE POETRY OF LOVE.

When Don Quixote de la Mancha was asked to describe the fair Dulcinea of whom he so often spake, he replied with commendable alacrity: "I will do what I undertake to delineate and copy, one by one, each several perfection of the peerless Dulcinea? The task were worthy of the pencils of Parrhasius, Timantes, and Apelles, or the graving tools of Lysippus. The hands of the best painters and statuaries should indeed be employed to give, in speaking paint, in marble, and Corinthian brass, an exact copy of her beauties; while Ciceronian and Demosthenian eloquence labored to reach the praise of her endowments." One naturally infers from this little speech that the Don was in love. Yet the fact that he made use of simple prose instead of poor poetry as a medium for the expression of his estimation of the female concerned leaves room for a doubt as to the correctness of such an inference. Be this as it may, we must leave the erotic old fellow at this point in order to consider a subject of vastly greater importance.

That males and females of all ages and all conditions should, in the course of their earthly existence, lapse in love is expected as much as that children will get the measles or the whooping cough. Love, of course, is an excellent thing. Nobody doubts this, and probably nobody will, so long as boys and girls and men and women inhabit the earth. Excellent, too, are its manifestations, though comical it is also to the observer. But of all the manifestations of this passion, none is so frequent as poetry. It seems to be almost a law of the human mind that whenever one falls in love the only vent for the feelings should be in verse. Men take to this more readily, perhaps, than women; and very naturally, inasmuch as it is recognized highly unbecoming for the latter to do more than receive the advances of the former. The quality of the rhyme which is begotten under these circumstances, like that of mercy, is not strained, but dropseth less gently and more frequently than the rain from heaven. One effusion of this sort per diem is a small allowance for some persons, while others are cool enough to be satisfied with one a month. Just where the golden mean lies it is impossible to determine. Love, like necessity, knows no law. The number of those who write good poetry is so very small in comparison with those who do not, that it occurs to us that a few hints to lovers who yearn for rhyme may be of value not only to them but also to the unfortunate beings that are the recipients of their effusions. It must be understood, however, that what may follow applies only to the stronger sex, a sense of gallantry forbidding any direct instruction to the ladies.

No man really in love will obtain the slightest relief from rhymes of his own construction unless he loads his incubrations with epithets. A novice in the business is safe in addressing his beloved by the title of an angel. Aside from the fact that the use of this word at once removes the whole matter from the low plane of earth, the thymster may enjoy the sweet consciousness that the conceit can by no possible means be open to the charge of novelty. "Apple of my eye" should be used sparingly, and never in the spring or summer, the reason for which any horticulturist can explain. In view of the poor quality and the high price of gas in this city we would suggest that a young sprig, residing in the metropolis, do better than to allude to the object of his affection as the light of his heart, thus combining in a very few words the two ideas of ornament and utility. Next in importance to epithets is a perusal of the writer's feelings. Inasmuch as sympathy provokes attachment, and attachment is closely allied to endearment, the great object in view should be to arouse sympathy on the part of the recipient of such verse in behalf of the one who grinds them out. The most obvious way to accomplish this is to represent one's self as suffering under the pangs of unrequited love. This was the method pursued by one who began a long poem with the lines—

"Without thee I'm lonely and sad,
But with thee I never feel bad," evinced a thorough appreciation of the peculiar people involved, though few would regard his mode of applying it as the most meritorious one possible. Lovers should always well to adopt a melancholy tone; to appear on paper as do the professional mourners of whom we read as figuring at funerals in England. Expressions like "desolate," "despairing," "inconsolable sadness," "sorrow that cannot be removed," may be used (as they often have been used) with effect. Only a tyro in matters of love would be betrayed into a strain of jubilation; the experienced know too well the weakness of the female mind for what is sad to make any such mistake.

It were the height of presumption to attempt to prescribe rules for the construction of love poetry, and foolish to expect that they would be observed, however correct they might be. Poor verse will probably always be a concomitant of gushing affection. So long, however, as it is confined to the privacy of confidential intercourse, no complaint can be made; but when it thrusts itself under the public eye in newspapers and other periodicals it is a proper subject for comment. At some future time we may collate a few specimens of this sort of rhyme, as they come to us day after day in print and in manuscript, but, for the present, we content ourselves with these few general observations upon the subject. Meanwhile, we commend to those who feel moved to gush in verse the suggestions herein made for their special benefit.

☞ East Cleveland, Ohio, enjoys the distinction of an exclusive earthquake. A correspondent of the New York Herald says: "It shook the houses for miles in the vicinity of the Mellrath Tavern. The landlord of that well known hotel has not yet recovered from its awful effects. Scarcely a whole article of crockery is left in some of the neat set houses. Large fissures are left in the ground, caused by the great convulsion. The solid earth was rent in twain for nearly a mile in one direction. No travel can take place on the road until a suspension bridge has been built across. The inhabitants are dreadfully alarmed; some think it is a forerunner of some dreadful catastrophe."

NO EXCUSE FOR BAD BREAD.

MORGAN'S

SELF-RISING

FLOUR.

THE Best, Cheapest and most economical Flour in use.

All lovers of good and wholesome bread, biscuit, etc., can, by using this Flour, save time, trouble, money, and disappointment. It is ALWAYS RELIABLE, and is not affected by hot or cold weather. It does not require Yeast Powders, Cream Tartar, Saleratus, Soda or salt, and ONLY HALF the usual quantity of shortening, and when cold sweet milk is used, still less shortening is needed.

ONE-FOURTH less of this flour is required to produce a light biscuit than of any other in the ordinary manner, which item alone will about PAY THE PRICE charged for adding the exhilerating ingredients.

IT IS EXTRA NICE FOR CAKES, and all kinds of pastry, requiring no more than TWO-THIRDS the usual amount of butter and eggs.

THE FLOUR EXCELS ALL OTHERS for Batter Cakes, Waffles, Puddings, the dumplings for Chicken Pie, etc., etc.

And is a Saving of from $6 to $8 per Barrell to the Consumer.

This article has met with the most wonderful success, a large proportion of the citizens of Memphis and surrounding country are now using it; but I am confined there are many others who would avail themselves of its advantages were they satisfied regarding its RELIABLENESS, SUPERIORITY, and CHEAPNESS.

To convince any doubting that such is the fact, I have obtained a large number of certificates from well and favorably known physicians and others, a few of which I give below. One trial will convince the most incredulous that it is to their advantage to use the flour, as an ECONOMY and SATISFACTION in every respect.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

MEMPHIS, TENN., August 2, 1865.

I have used Morgan's Self Rising Flour, and find it to be a most excellent article. I have also examined the ingredients with a view of its self rising properties, and find them to be, not only healthy, but adapted to perfect nutrition. I can freely recommend it as a most healthful and desirable flour, producing an article of bread superior to that made in the ordinary manner.

JNO. B. FRASER M. D.

We fully concur in the above, having examined the ingredients.

C. L. WILSON, M. D.
R. F. BROWN, M. D.

I have examined the ingredients and pronounce them innocent.

R. C. MALONE, M. D.

MEMPHIS, TENN., August 21, 1865.

I have used Morgan's Self Rising Flour, and examined its ingredients. It is all that the author claims for it, it is entirely harmless to all sick or well, and is admirably adapted as a diet for dyspeptics and convalescents, its materials supplying in their case, healthful and much needed nutriment.

I. W. GARRETT, M. D.

I will purchase any barrel of flour sent to me, or will furnish any quantity of flour ordered, but for my own sales I will sell Morgan's the very best.

T. Harrison, (or its equal.)

The Bread and biscuit made from this flour can be eaten as well warm as cold, without the least inconvenience to the weak and dyspeptic stomach, and has been known to greatly benefit such cases.

Put up in 6, 12, 24, and 48 pound pa kages, Half Barrels and Barrels.

This flour will be found on sale in packages at all first class family groceries in the city, and at wholesale at the manufactory, 48 Main street, 7 doors South of Beale, Memphis, Tenn.

A liberal discount will be made to the Trade.

This invention consists of Duplex (or two) Elliptic Pure Refined Steel Springs, ingeniously joined together, and firmly fastened, edge to edge, making the toughest, most flexible, elastic and durable spring ever used. They seldom bend or break, like the Single Springs, and consequently preserve their perfect and beautiful shape more than twice as long as any Single Spring Skirt that ever has or can be made.

The wonderful flexibility and great comfort and pleasure to be had by using the Duplex Elliptic Skirt will be experienced particularly by all crowded assemblies, opera, carriages, railroad cars, church pews, arm chairs, or promenade and house dress, as the skirt can be folded, when in use, into as small place as easily and conveniently as a muslin dress.

A lady having enjoyed the pleasure, comfort and great convenience of wearing the Duplex Elliptic Skirt for a single day will never afterwards willingly dispense with their use. For Children, misses and young ladies they are superior to all others.

The hoops are covered with two ply double twilled thread, and will wear twice as long as the single yarn covering which is used on all single steel hoop skirts. The three bottom rods on every skirt are also double, instead of two or double covered to prevent the covering from wearing off the rods when dragging down stairs, stone steps, etc., etc., which they are constantly subject to when in use.

All the cords are of the best and elegant corded tapes, and are the best quality in every part, giving to the wearer the most graceful and perfect shape possible, and are no competition for lightness and durability, comfortable and economical skirt ever made.
