MEMPHIS APPEAL.

ORISONS.

Morn lifts from her blue eyes
The white clouds of her eyelids, and her breath
Lays down within the branches, the myrtleries
Of life that mimes death.

The gleaming skies invest
A world yet drowsy with the shades of even;
Earth, like a babe upon its mother's breast,
Sleeps in the arms of heaven.

Awake! the clarion bird
That heralds the return of light and life,
By the shrill lattice cry distinctly heard,
Calls to the daily strife.

Up, up! The war drum beats!
Now let the reverent prayer be briefly said;
For labor is politics, and everything
"Give us our daily bread."

Give not alone the crust
That feeds our greater nature's fitting debt:
We ask, O Father, that indeed for dust,
Life for the living seal!

Give the true heart and high,
That thrills in danger with emotions grand,
And struggles fearless, as the king that lie
In the dark angel's hand.

Give the unfiring mind,
That seeks rich treasures in the mines of thought,
Yielding with open hands to all mankind
The gold so dearly bought.

Give patience, that unfrets
Her wearing self upon the tide of years,
Where the slow oyster moulds to gleaming pearls
Its wealth of hidden tears.

Give to dear human love!
Math man we yield to time's devouring wave,
But ways we find, like the moonlight wandering dove,
The olive-leaf we crave.

Give the free hand that sows
The broad domain where many a neighbor grows,
When, in its ripe and beautiful repose,
The harvest harvest says.

Then from the conquered soil
Shall the sad tree of life and death arise,
Till the heart sings amid its daily toil
The music of the skies.

S. H. C.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

We put on record the following from Mr. WILSON, the Senator from Massachusetts, in the Senate on the 8th inst., in reference to the Constitutional amendment abolishing slavery:

Mr. Wilson said: "I will endeavor to answer the questions of Mr. Yates frankly. I will say to begin with that the constitutional amendment, which was proposed here by the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Henderson), and reported by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Trumbull), adopted by Congress and ratified by the people, was never understood by any man in the Senate or House of Representatives or by the public press of the country as conferring upon Congress the right to force the suffrage on any State of the Union. I say further that, if it had been supposed that it gave that right, it would never have passed Congress or received the assent of the States. I will say, sir, that I think, beyond doubt or question, it tied the Congress with ample and full power to protect the civil rights and immunities of every emancipated slave in the country. That that slave is as free as I am; that the child emancipated in his cradle today, is as free as the Senator from Illinois or myself, and as much a citizen of the United States as any other of us; that citizenship never did in this country carry with it the right of suffrage, or the right to hold office. A man may be a citizen and not have the right of suffrage. There are men in Massachusetts who have been citizens for forty years, and have not the right of suffrage today.

Mr. Yates—Was it understood at the time of the passage of the amendment that it would confer civil rights?

Mr. Wilson—I supposed it did give Congress ample power to make these men as free as the non-voting white population of those States—as free as women and children, or persons who had not the right of suffrage. But I did not understand then, and I do not believe now, that it gave Congress the power to define their people with the right of suffrage or the right to hold office.

Mr. Yates—Suppose I do not deny the proposition of the Senator, I will put this question to him; I do not deny the power of the States to regulate suffrage by any means, or to decide upon the qualifications of those who are to vote, to devise and to make rules and regulations. It is the duty of the States to regulate this right, but they cannot destroy it, and I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he believes it in the power of the State of Massachusetts, or of South Carolina, in simply regulating the right of suffrage, to deprive the citizens of a State of the right to vote altogether?

Mr. Wilson—I answer that, right or wrong, the State of Massachusetts has done it.

Mr. Yates—That is not the question.

Mr. Wilson—The Senator may say that it is not right, that it ought not to be done. I agree with him. In my own State I voted against an amendment to the State Constitution requiring the qualification of reading.

Mr. Yates—I ask if this proposed amendment does not allow the rebel States to exclude freedmen from voting?

Mr. Wilson—I have never read, or heard or seen anything that convinced me that the adoption of the constitutional amendment gave the Congress of the United States any power to regulate suffrage in any State.

Mr. Yates—I desire to know whether by the pending amendment South Carolina or any other State cannot disenfranchise them entirely?

Mr. Wilson—I may answer the Senator simply by saying that I think this amendment leaves the matter to the people where it always has been. There is no implication in it; no compromise; no surrender of any power of the Government.

Mr. Yates—The position I assume is this: that before the adoption of constitutional amendment the States had a right under the Constitution and under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to disfranchise the colored people. Colored men were considered a subject race—not part of the people—not part of the sovereignty, but, Sir, by the constitutional amendment they are free as the Senator from Massachusetts this day. Now, the question is whether, with this amendment before us, we will put into this amendment a new amendment by which these States may disfranchise those persons altogether?

Mr. Wilson, in reply to Mr. Yates, read from the opinion of Attorney-General Bates, that political rights and political power were essentially different; that the former belonged to all citizens alike, and were in the very name and nature of citizenship; but the latter does not belong to all citizens alike.

Mr. Wilson continued his speech at some length.

Troubles with Indians in Montana.

From the St. Louis Republican, 14th.

We have been shown a letter from Helena, Montana Territory, dated February 18, which contains some intelligence of interest not heretofore published. Dr. Atkinson, a well known citizen of the Territory, had been killed at Fort Benton. He was originally a surgeon in the army, and in a fifth sergeant's detachment which was sent up the Missouri river a few years ago, to aid Lieut. Mullan in constructing the wagon road from Oregon. On the completion of his enterprise he resigned his commission and became a resident of Montana.

Owing to the continuance of murders committed by the Blackfeet Indians, the Territorial authorities have raised our five hundred volunteers to go down to the Fort, in the vicinity of which the Blackfeet were prosecuting their depredations. These Indians have been hostile ever since the treaty was made with them last fall, and are retaliating upon many of the whites who fall in their way, in return for the killing of several members of their tribe, by which it is stated 2 men fain gratulate before that event.

The report that many men had been badly frosted and others frozen to death during the cold weather in the mountains is confirmed. The story that rich discoveries of gold had been found there proved to be a hoax, and not a few of the unfortunate victims paid for their credulity with their lives.

No End to Agitation.

At the great meeting in Wilmington, Del., Hon. John A. Nicholson said:

The position of President Johnson is that we want no more amendments to the Constitution. The amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery, together with the clause which gives to Congress the power to pass laws to prevent the re-establishment of this race, is all that is necessary, and more especially at such a time as this. One of the great arguments brought to bear for the purpose of hastening the passage of this amendment was this, when slavery was abolished there would be an end to agitation. Why, gentlemen, it has commenced with redoubled fury, and no one can tell where it will end unless the people will rise in their might—in their devotion to the American Union—superior to the influences and trammels of party—and put down these men who have this power; who, prompted by feelings of sectional hate and fanaticism, would see the glorious Constitution trampled in the dust—who would see it entirely changed and revolutionized rather than part with the power they have so shamefully abused.

☞ Respecting the loyalty of the people of Tennessee, "Omega," the Knoxville correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial writes:

It has been charged that the people of Tennessee are not loyal; that they are not yet entitled to a voice in the Legislature of the country. If they are not loyal now, when will they be loyal? Will it be the next week, or the next year? Will it be when a Federal soldier is stationed in every house? Will it be when military government has wrested from them the last remnant of civil liberty? Will it be when they are forced to accept laws they believe to be tyrannical and in conflict with the spirit of the Government? Is this the lesson of history, or is the nature of mankind? Can you legislate loyalty into their people? Can you win the good will of these eight millions by distrancing them? or spurning all professions of sincerity? or disregarding their plighted faith?

CANADA.

Progress of Volunteering—Address of the Commander-in-Chief.

TORONTO, C. W., March 12.

The number of volunteers answering the Government call is largely in excess of the demand. An official military order is published. The Commander-in-Chief regrets that he is compelled, as a measure of precaution, to call for the services of so large a number of volunteers. This step does not result from the existence of a condition of war between our sovereign and a foreign State, but is a necessary performance of duty which has devolved on the Government to make provision for protecting the lives and property of the inhabitants of the province against threatened attacks by lawless men, who use the territory of a neighboring power for the purpose of openly organizing a enterprise against the sovereign rights of the Queen and the security of her subjects. The Commander-in-Chief relies with confidence upon the loyal spirit of the Canadians to meet this extraordinary state of facts, and feels assured that if necessary the entire population of the province will come forward to resist any invasion of the country. The Commander-in-Chief continues that he knows it is unnecessary to address observations to the officers and men called out, on the importance of strict attention to their military duties, and he is convinced, should the threats of an attack be carried into effect, the Canadian volunteers of the present day will, with God's blessing, meet with as much success in repelling such criminal and wanton outrages against humanity and civilization as was given their ancestors, whether they were called upon to roll back from their territories the tide of legitimate war, or repulse the attacks of lawless invaders.

FROM EUROPE.

Additional by the City of Boston.

NEW YORK, March 12.

European files of the 5th contain additional particulars. The London Globe of February 28, says: "We have authority to state that there is no foundation of any sort for the rumor that Earl Russell had begged permission of her Majesty to resign, and recommended the Duke of Somerset as his successor. The whole story from beginning to end is a pure fiction."

A meeting was held in Liverpool, Wednesday afternoon. Upward of £800 was subscribed for the purpose of affording aid to the Fenians now in penal servitude.

The Cork Reporter of March 1, says: "Emigration to the United States has already commenced on a large scale. It is not the poorer classes that are departing, but those who could live at home if they could make up their mind to be content with their lot. Upward of 600 passengers were waiting in Queenstown after the steamer had taken a full load."

A Paris correspondent writes: "It appears that all attempts at bringing the Prince Napoleon back to his former position as President of the great Exhibition have failed, and that he absolutely refuses to be reconciled with the Emperor until the latter shall make some sort of public acknowledgment. The Prince maintains that as he is a Bonaparte, he has therefore the right to judge whether the sentiments he uttered at Ajaccio were Bonapartist or not, and on these sentiments he is willing to stand or fall. The Imperial Convention of France will therefore be presided over by the Minister of Agriculture, Commerce and Public Works, M. Rehin, a most competent and popular business man."

The following is the amendment to the address of the Emperor, urged by the opposition in the French Corps Legislatif, upon which the great speech of M. Thiers was delivered: "We condemned the Mexican expedition at its beginning, as imposing embarrassments and sacrifices upon France. Last year, the return of our soldiers was solemnly promised. We regret that it has undergone a retardation which the interests of France do not justify. The events have not forgotten the original declaration made by the Government regarding the causes of the expedition, and it is astonished to see our army now devoted to the defense of a foreign throne."

At a meeting in Madeira lately, several officers of military reputation volunteered to serve on the Pacific in the event of their services being needed.

This Veteran of 16,000 Fires Still Hard at Work!
BY AN
Efficient Organization of 1,000 Practical Underwriters, from Nova Scotia to California and Lake Superior, Mexico and the Gulf, harmonizing the Science of average with compensating rates to the Advancement of the Public Welfare.
FLATTERING TESTIMONIALS OF THE
ÆTNA
INSURANCE COMPANY,
From the Insurance Department
—OF THE—
STATE OF NEW YORK.
The Insurance Commissioner to the Legislature:
"The Ætna Insurance Company of Hartford, one of the most successful Fire Insurance Companies of this or any other country."
"Connecticut Companies follow the rules and practices of the Ætna almost as carefully as if they were embodied in statute law."
Again, pointing to errors of practice in New York Companies, the Ætna's successful management and solid rates are called to their attention thus:
"It still remains more a matter of wonder than imitation in the insurance world."
"By what subtle alchemy has the corporation been enabled to turn its full-paid capital into the philosopher's stone?"
"The extraordinary events which have distinguished its unparalleled financial history."
The Ætna Losses were more than in the United States, at this period of the year, are about $250,000. The telegraph daily sounds startling notes of warning to all prudent persons.
Do not Neglect the Security of Reliable Insurance.
