Grace George in "A Woman's Way" at the Lyceum June 20.

AT THE THEATERS.

"A Woman's Way," the attraction at the Lyceum next Monday, June 20, is a delightful comedy, delightfully acted by Grace George and her splendid company.

The story tells of the Howard Stantons, who like many young society folks, are suffering from too much money and too much time to idle away or waste in the hunt for pleasure. Marion Stanton confesses she has been going in a bit strong for society when, perhaps, she should have taken a more lively interest in sports to which Edward is devoted. Automobiling is his particular fad. And when the play opens he is suffering from a sprained arm, the result of an auto accident the night before. The newspapers have the mere facts that the Stanton car was found wrecked in a ditch and that Stanton and a lady whose identity is unknown were rescued by friends in another machine. Rumors of divorce appear in glaring headlines in the afternoon papers. Marion remains reticent as to just what steps she may take, but the family and Howard's arrive one by one, all greatly agitated over the dread of scandal and notoriety. Only to Howard does the wife admit her intention to be divorced. Then she asks for the name of the other woman promising she won't use it in her suit. He tells her the lady is Mrs. Elizabeth Blakemore, a rich Southern widow. Marion immediately suggests inviting her to dinner, much to her husband's astonishment. Just what the result of this triangular meeting, or as Marion calls it "a three-ring-circus," is to be, not even Marion can be certain. Oliver Whitney, an old friend of Marion's, is called upon to help her. His chiefest duty is to make most desperate love to her when Howard is about. Mrs. Blakemore arrives and Marion is extremely cordial to her. There is an inference in her manner that matters as they stand are wholly agreeable to her, in fact she appears eager to help Howard's case along. By giving a man his own way without a murmur or remonstrance she shows him he doesn't really want it after all. At the dinner party, which is a family affair, Marion's brother, Bob Livingston, and Howard's brother-in-law Edward Morris and Oliver Whitney each recognize Mrs. Blakemore as an old friend and to each she has answered to the pet name "Puss." Bob tells Marion that he cannot have Sallie, his wife, meeting Mrs. Blakemore, and she advises him to say this to Howard and tell him of the little affair he had with "Puss" at Palm Beach. Morris, too, is compelled by Marion to admit his awkward position to his brother-in-law and tell of his little flirtation with "Puss." The situations are exceedingly comic and the fun fast and furious as gradually Howard begins to grasp the humor of his own predicament. The ending is happy, of course, for Marion shows Howard the error of his ways and makes Mrs. Blakemore beat an undignified retreat.

AMERICAN HOUSE OF LORDS HOLDS LABOR UNDER SHERMAN BAN

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 17.—The United States senate again proved that it had merited the characterization "House of Corporation Lords," when, by a vote of 34 to 16, it adopted an amendment of the senate committee on appropriation striking out of the sundry civil bill the house amendment, which provided that no money appropriated by this measure for the prosecution of trusts in violation of the Sherman act shall be expended for suits against labor organizations.

That the house amendment, which had been introduced by Representative Hughes, of New Jersey, was considered dangerous to the interests is shown not only by the recommendation of the Aldrich committee, but also by the strong support given to the senate committee amendment by the foremost senators of the administration machine.

Some were rabid in their denunciation of the organizations of labor, others damned unionism with faint praise, while only two progressive senators of Oklahoma openly and bravely championed the cause of the millions of organized wage earners of this country.

What is considered by many as being the most powerful and eloquent speech in behalf of organized labor delivered on the floor of the senate, was made in the course of the debate on this amendment by the blind senator, Gore, of Oklahoma. He said, in part:

"The proposition as it comes from the house does not seek to legalize what is unlawful; it does not seek to legalize violence; it merely protects individual laborers and labor organizations against prosecutions for acts that are not within themselves unlawful.

"The prosecution of laboring men for an effort to promote their own welfare and prosperity has come down to us from a darker age. In 1351, a statute was passed by the English parliament which authorized justices of the peace to fix the wages of laborers in England and made it a crime for any laboring man to accept a larger wage or better compensation than that prescribed by the justices of the peace.

"That statute remained in full force and effect for four and a half centuries. It was then repealed because the justices of the peace were suspected of too much liberality towards the laboring men of England."

Senator Gore then traced the labor legislation of England, showing that the workers of that country had been prohibited from organizing or meeting to discuss their conditions of labor, and that not until 1875 were the British labor organizations legalized.

"The effort in the United States to prosecute laboring men for attempting to better their own condition is simply a relic of those darker times. We ought to have outlived them. We ought to cast them behind us. In the blaze of the twentieth century civilization we ought not to adhere to the ancient and barbarous practice of a darker age."

Senator Owen pointed out the fact that the anti-trust laws were not intended to suppress labor organizations but to protect the laborers and consumers from being oppressed by combinations of capital. He said:

"The huge organization of capital in restraint of trade, raising prices on the necessities of life and imposing on the people for the mere sake of ambition, greed, or cold and cruel avarice, needs restraint both on moral, ethical and legal grounds.

"Organization of laboring men" to protect women and children from starvation, from exposure, sickness, and death, are justified on every standpoint and should be encouraged.

Particularly vitriolic in his attack on organized labor was Senator Hepburn, of Idaho, who charged union men with being guilty of every crime on the calendar.

"The plea is generally," said Senator Heyburn, "that they were peaceful in their intentions, but the fact was in many cases that they were not peaceful in their actions. I have seen them, under the plea that is made on their behalf, seize railroad trains, seize depots, seize mines, seize the country until the government of the United States was compelled to put its army there for the purpose of enforcing the law."

The yellow streak in the machine senators was particularly evident when they announced their feeble "yeas," so low that Senator Owen protested, much to the amusement of the people in the galleries.

Two Democratic senators lined up with the Aldrich machine on this anti-labor amendment. They were Stone and McEnery. Republican senators Burkeft, Dooliver, Jones, Page and Warner voted for striking out the labor clause.

AMONG THE UNIONS

The Lodi, Cal., teamsters have organized. Eighteen men have signed the charter, and for the next thirty days there will be opportunity for others to do the same.

The Guggenheim interests are distributing plate matter free to many labor and other papers. The "enlightenment" of the people on Alaska is sought.

Shingle weavers in Spokane have established a free employment office. It will operate for all of Western Washington, and enable the boys to shed themselves of the employment shark.

Every member of organized labor will be asked to contribute two cents to carry the hatters' case to the United supreme court. On it depend the legal right of organization and boycott.

Wallowa, Wash., farmers' in a local of the Farmers' Union in that county are securing sacks, twine and other supplies at reduced figures. Working farmers are finding out that organization pays.

SIMPLE LIFE FOR ME.

Give me the fields and roses,
Where both God and man proposes,
We shall get the best in life from day to day.
Where, away from wild delusion
And the city's mad confusion,
We can live some as we journey by the way.

Where the sunshine is its brightest
And man's troubles are the lightest,
Where nature holds its sway just as it should,
And the air is fresh and bracing
And you don't go through life a-racing,
And the fields produce the food that's always good.

'Mid the noise of city hustle,
With its never-ending bustle,
Where there's a game of never-ceasing strife;
Where there's grasping more than giving,
And the higher cost of living,
Where the one thing that's cheap is human life.

Take me back to happy farming,
Where the atmosphere is charming,
And waters always sweet just from the spring;
From the mossy bucket drinking,
It just sets me right to thinking,
I should be far happier than the crowned king.

Life is largely what we make it,
How we live it, how we take it,
But for me the fields of clover and the kipe.
City folks may like the glamor,
The excitement and the clamor,
But the country life will always do for mine.
