SETS HIS LEG AFIRE

Attempt to Apply Heat to Rheumatic Member Disastrous

Chester, Pa., Jan. 10.—Applying a lighted match to his legs after he had rubbed them with alcohol, Steven Nicas, thirty-six years old, was nearly burned to death. He is in the Chester Hospital in a very serious condition.

On the advice of a friend, Nicas rubbed his lower limbs with alcohol to ease his suffering from rheumatism. When he got no relief from the rubbing it was suggested that a little heat would be a good thing for a sufferer from rheumatic pains, and Nicas, thinking the afflicted parts required the heat, lighted a match and held the burning taper close to his leg.

Immediately his body was a mass of flames, his clothing catching fire. Fellow boarders came to his rescue and beat out the flames after they had wrapped him in a blanket.
