Nancy Wynne Tells of Five Teas Planned for This Week—Miss Fanny Cox Weightman to Be Introduced Today at Dansant

MORE teas to the fore this week! This afternoon the Aubrey Weightmans will give one at the Ritz-Carlton for their daughter, Fanny Cox Weightman, and tomorrow will be a large tea at the Acorn Club, which the Richard Newlins and Mrs. Barry Siter are giving to introduce their daughters, Margaret Newlin and Elizabeth Siter. Maud Harrison's card is also in the invitation, so there will be "three little maids from school" introduced into the great wide world all at one time.

On Wednesday Mrs. Brook Snow will give a tea to introduce her daughter Constance, and Mrs. Charles William Schwartz will give one for her two daughters, Anne and Katherine. On Thursday, Lee Tunis will be given a tea by her father and mother, Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Tunis. Still another tea will be given on Friday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. Perot Bissell and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Tunis to introduce their niece, Elizabeth Dale Willson, daughter of Mrs. Wurts Willson, who is a sister of Mrs. Bissell and Mrs. Tunis.

Saturday alone will be tealess, but then there's the Army and Navy game here and the Yale-Harvard game in New Haven, so who could go to a tea.

FANNY WEIGHTMAN, who is to be introduced this afternoon, and, by the way, there is to be dancing at this tea, is a very attractive girl with light curly hair and laughing eyes. She is the Weightmans' eldest daughter and a great-granddaughter of William Weightman, who died some years ago, leaving many millions to his daughter, Mrs. Penfield, who is Fanny's great aunt. The Weightmans live at 1830 Rittenhouse Square.

BESIDES the tea today there will be a theatre party for Mary Ridgely Carter, given by the John N. Packards, 3d, and Mrs. John W. Coles will entertain at the San Carlos opera in a box for Elisabeth McElroy, the party to be chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Robert McLean. The Harry Paul Baileys will give a theatre party for Sue Goodman, Mrs. Howard Seaver's daughter, this evening also, and goodness, we had the Morning Musicale today at the Bellevue-Stratford, besides the rest of the excitements. It looks like a very full week to me.

THERE are a great many unusual dresses now which to the casual gaze look very simple, but they are really quite intricate with fancy panels and all sorts of odd things.

Miss Kitty Porter has a fascinating dress which I've seen her wearing. Upon first examination it seems to be a perfectly plain garment of black velvet made with a round neck and plain skirt, across the front of which is a wide band of white fur. Looking closer, it appears that the fur is not attached to the dress but is on a sort of apron which hangs down the front and is fastened at the waist with narrow bands of black velvet ending in cut-steel buckles. The buckles can be undone and the apron removed and used as a short cape. It is very attractive.

MR. I.—is a dear old gentleman, who is very fond of children. Now it happens that a little girl and her family moved into the house next door to Mr. I.— several weeks ago. A day or two after their arrival good Mr. I.— saw the small maiden playing in the front garden as he passed, and having divined that he liked children, as all children can, the small girl looked at him and said: "You're Mr. I.—." "Yes," assented he, "and you're Miss M—." "Oh, no," said the little girl, "I'm Marjory Anne." (In the meantime Mrs. I.— made several attempts to talk, but Marjory Anne was shy.) In a few days, however, Mr. I.— passed her playing again, and as she ran toward him, he remarked: "I know your name, it's Marjory Anne." "Yes," she said, "it is, but I don't think Mrs. I.— knows it; will you tell her?" NANCY WYNNE.
