JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Hears Clemenceau's Speech in the Academy and Admires the Troop—She Attends the Theatre and a Tea

OF COURSE, most of Saturday morning and well into the afternoon itself was taken up with getting into the Academy. Listening to "The Grand Old Man of France," getting out of the Academy and through the crowd again. I am always glad when we show courtesy to and appreciation of a great statesman, and certainly Clemenceau is that, and is one of the great figures of history. But somehow the audience lacked enthusiasm during the speech. Several times there was a ripple of laughter and some applause, but it was not thunderous. And it rather voiced the sentiment of our people on the subject of our obligations to France. And I noticed both George Norris and Senator Pepper were extremely careful in their introductions, speaking always of the greatness of the man himself—Senator Pepper styling him an immortal, but not indorsing any of his or his country's contentions.

He is a wonderful man, and we'll all be proud in future years to be able to say we have heard him and seen him. And the attention of the audience during the speech was one of the most perfect tributes I have ever witnessed. There was not even a cough to be heard. The silence was so intense you could hear it, sort of floating around his words.

And the troop. I heard two women talking on Broad street where I was standing to watch the procession pass. As the troop headed by Clem Wood came around City Hall Square, one turned to the other and said: "There is no cavalry like it anywhere. I've traveled in the Old World as well as here, and I have never seen a more beautiful uniform nor a more stunning troop of riders anywhere." And it's true, say I, being a thorough Philadelphian, and therefore thoroughly satisfied with my city's traditions.

There was a wonderful turnout of people at the academy, as there should have been, of course. But I found it difficult to see and recognize very many. Of course, Mrs. Joseph Leidy was there; she is chairman of the French Committee of the Emergency Aid, you know. And Mrs. Willis Martin and the Judge, Mrs. Oswald Chew, who is president of the Women's Overseas' Legion here; Mrs. Arthur Lea, Mrs. Stanley Flagg, Jr., and ever so many others.

SPEAKING of the Women's Overseas Legion, what do you think they did? They are going to open a shop today at 628 Market street, you know, to sell things made by the disabled soldiers. Well, they have a stunning poster to that effect, and if they did not get the "Tiger" to put his signature on one of them, and if they are not going to sell it in the shop! Now don't you think that was smart? I tell you, you have to get up early these days if you want to get ahead of the women.

THE third meeting of the Opera Supper Club is to be in the foyer tomorrow night after the opera, and already I have heard rumors of much entertaining. It is even more successful this season than it was last year, and that is saying a good deal.

The hostesses for the dance tomorrow evening will include Mrs. Sydney Thayer, Mrs. Charlton Yarnall, Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Edward W. Clark, 3d, Mrs. J. Hamilton Cheston, Mrs. Robert McLean and Mrs. Norton Downs, Jr.

Mrs. Drexel will have a party, and among others who have taken tables are Mrs. Edward N. Wright, Miss Wister, Mrs. C. Lathrop Richie, Mrs. C. Sewell Clark and Mrs. Daniel L. Hebard in addition to the hostesses, all of whom are entertaining.

SARAH DUANE was introduced at a tea on Saturday afternoon and Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Barringer gave another large theatre party, followed by a supper and dance at their home, for their debutante daughter, Elizabeth, who is to be introduced at at homes on two Thursdays in January.

Sarah, or Dolly, Duane looked perfectly sweet. She's very pretty. Like her mother, who was Miss May Morris, a sister of former Ambassador Morris, she is dark and has beautiful hair. Her frock was of white metal cloth made with bands of sequins over the shoulders and a girdle embroidered in sequins. Mrs. Duane wore a lovely frock of turquoise blue velvet.

I happened in at the same play as the Barringers and saw Elizabeth's frock. It was a lovely model of blue and silver brocade. Have you noticed how much blue is being worn this year? Much more than pink it seems to me, though jade green and emerald green are pretty strong seconds to the blue.

NANCY WYNNE.
