Aleck the Barber : —BY J. P. McEVOY

"I'VE been looking over the Christmas cards they've got this year," said Aleck the Barber, "and I can't help but wonder why it never occurred to anybody to get out a card showing a nice little fireplace with a candle on each side of it.

"It would be so Christmasy, especially if the fireplace was painted red and maybe there was a little green wreath hanging over it and underneath it said:

"'Bringing cheer for all the year
To you out there from us back here.'

"DIDN'T I see a card something like that?" says the wife of Aleck the Barber.

"It's just possible that you might have, though I doubt it," said Aleck the Barber. "But I have another idea that is even more original.

"Take a nice card with rough edges like a saw all around and then make a little picture up in the corner of a colonial house with a lot of snow on the roof, and a road going up to it, with a light shining in the window, and then print down below:

'Ye olde time Christmasse Greeting'
"That would knock them dead.

"And while I have been at it, I've figured out a good New Year card, too. Make a picture of a little naked boy up in the corner. He is wearing a little sash around his shoulder on which is written '1923,' or 'New Year,' or something like that. And then I've figured out a cute little verse to go with it. Would you like to hear it?"

"No," said the wife of Aleck the Barber.

"WELL, here it is anyway," said Aleck the Barber. "It's so good, I want to give it to the world:

"'Peace and plenty to thee from me,
For nineteen hundred and twenty-three.
Oh gee! Oh gosh! Oh gosh! Oh gee!
Wow! Golly! Zowie! Whee!'"

"Terrible," said the wife of Aleck the Barber.
