In another column has been recounted the story of the features extraordinary that yesterday went to make the league opening here of unusual interest. In that column it was remarked that "the game's the thing." That undoubtedly was a fact, for it was some game.

No matter if the Richmond team was defeated in the first championship contest of the season, no matter if the errors figured noticeably in that defeat or if their inability to hit in the pinches accounted in no small way for the ultimate result, it was a real baseball game.

There was something of the old-time clouting with the modern smallness of score, a suggestion of the many miscues that featured the ancient contests and traces of the fast fielding and inside play that characterizes the best of the present day battles. It was a contest that kept the crowd thrilled at all times and one whose decision balanced on the fence until the last man had been retired.

Both Lee and Causey were frequently in difficulties from which they extricated themselves generally in good shape with the aid of their fielders. Although a couple of fast double plays, resulting from lucky fly-line drives off local bats, spoiled chances for increasing the Richmond end of the score, failure to do so largely was due the inability of the Richmond players to clout when a hit would have meant a run and possibly the game. Unusually good opportunities were afforded them in both the sixth and the eighth frames, but on each occasion the players having the destiny of the contest in hand popped up flies that easily were taken care of.

Rochester started the hostilities with apparent determination to get an early advantage and they secured it. Wyatt Lee unloosened a deceptive one and fooled Farrell to the extent of forcing Hart to call a strike on him. The next ball, however, struck the batter on the wrist and he trotted to first with a limp, for ball players always limp when struck by a pitched ball no matter where it hits them. Rodriquez, the little Cuban first sacker, tried to bunt him down, and succeeded so well that he gained a life himself when Lee fumbled the ball.

Fisher's Hit Scores Run.

Simmons then drove a hot grounder to McDermott, who touched third, forcing Ferrell out, although Simmons lived and the Cuban was safe on second. Fisher promptly got a bit out of his bat, and Rodriquez romped home. A moment later Simmons was caught off third by Reynolds and McDermott, and Lee threw Fisher out at second, Steinbrenner tagging him.

It was not until the fifth that Mike Doolan's lads were able to garner another run. Men were retired in order during the second and third, and, although Fisher landed for a double-bagger in the fourth, he was unable to advance beyond third. Schepner opened the fifth with a single through short, and advanced a peg when Wendel was passed. He was out at third, though, when Causey dropped a bunt in front of the plate and Reynolds threw to McDermott. Farrell popped to McDermott, but Rodriquez came through with a single to center field, and Wendel counted, Causey bringing up on third. Simmons was an easy out, and the side was retired.

Red McDermott threw wide to first base, after fielding Fisher's drive in the sixth, and that player went to second before the ball could be recovered. He made third on Doolan's fly to Hanford, but was unable to count, Lee forcing three men to fly out in succession. The pitcher was in a tight place again in the following frame, McDermott hooted Wendel's drive, and he was safe on first. Causey fanned, much to his chagrin, but Farrel singled and advanced the catcher. However, Lee fielded the Cuban's bunt and threw Wendel out at third. Simmons singled to center, advancing both Farrell and Rodriquez. Fisher, however, drove a long one to Clemens, and the side was retired without a score.

The third Rochester run was registered in the eighth. Schweitzer got a life on Steinbrenner's error, and advanced on Doolan's sacrifice. Schepner singled to center and took second when Hanford threw to third in a vain attempt to catch Schweitzer. That player jaunted home when Wendel drove out a long sacrifice to Hanford. Causey retired the side with an easy one to Lee.

Bruce Kills Runner at Plate.

Bruce staved off a run in the ninth that threatened to take the game from Richmond with a great throw to the plate. Farrell had opened the session with a double to center field and advanced when Rodriquez beat out a clout to Lee. Simmons then drove a long fly to Bruce. The fielder caught the sphere and hurled it perfectly into Reynolds's hands, the catcher tagging out Farrell as he slid to the plate.

However, the tenth decided the contest. Schweitzer opened with a single through short, advanced when Doolan sacrificed, and counted on Schepner's safe one into center field. After Wendel had got on, as a result of Steinbrenner's second miscue, Hack Eibel retired the side with an unassisted double play, going into the air after Causey's drive over the bag and touching the sack as he came down.

It was not until the fifth that Richmond was able to push a run over the home pan. Lee had brought the crowd up with the local's first bingle in the second, but was doubled at second on a fielder's choice by which Steinbrenner got a life. However, that player was retired a moment later on an attempt to pilfer. After Clemens had hit to center field, in the third, Hanford drove a liner to Rodriquez which that player handled so nicely that he doubled Bobby off first.

Eibel opened the fifth with a double to center, made third on a wild pitch, and counted after Bruce had been passed and Curry had fled out to Simmons, when Reynolds singled through second base. Rodriquez's error gave first to Lee, and advanced Bruce to third, but he died there.

Reynolds's Bingle Ties Score.

After Steinbrenner had popped to Schepner, in the sixth, McDermott and Clemens hit safely, but Hanford and Eibel popped up flies and no run was made. The score was tied in the seventh, however, by Bruce, who was passed. He was sacrificed to second by Curry, and tallied when Reynolds doubled into left field.

Again the register was tied in the eighth, this time by Steinbrenner, who hit to right field and got a life. Wendel's bad peg to second made him safe there. Clemens's hit was a fly to left, but Hanford delivered with a bingle to the same garden, and Steiney romped home by hard running.

Richmond players were retired in order in the ninth and the first two in the tenth were easy outs. Clemens started things with a hit to left and stole second, threatening to tie the score again. However, Hanford lined one to Doolan, who threw him out at first, and the game was over.

As has been said, it was a dandy game, and the only thing that can be regretted is the score itself. Sore arms among the Richmond players were evident, as was their inability to hit in the pinches. The sore arms accounted for several of the errors, while a large part of the blame for the others can be attributed to the unevenness of the playing field. These features also accounted in a large measure for the Rochester miscues.

Harry Hartsell reported to Billy Smith yesterday, and may get into the game to-day. Adams probably will pitch, while Lohman is expected to be Mike Doolan's choice for mound work.

FABRIQUE MAKES ERRORS THAT GIVE GIANTS GAME

Player's First Wobbles Come Together and Are Followed by Five Bingles and Tallies.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 17.—Fabrique, Brooklyn's sensational shortstop, made his first errors of the season to-day, both coming together and giving New York an 8-to-2 victory. With the score 2 to 1 in favor of New York, Fabrique fumbled Raridan's grounder, and then muffed a throw on a force-out by Perritt. The visitors followed with five hits and five runs. The score:

Ten Per Cent Tax Will Stop Minors Playing

"Every minor league will be forced to suspend operations if the proposed 10 per cent tax on gross baseball receipts becomes a law," was the comment made last night by Alvin M. Smith, president of the Richmond Exhibition Company, when informed of the government's plan to levy a war tax on baseball.

President Smith said that the average attendance in minor league cities, certainly in Richmond, would have to be trebled if the game could exist under such conditions. While he expects good attendances at the games this season, he does not predict there will be anything like that increase, hence his opinion that the minors would be forced to stop playing.

THINKS TAX TOO HIGH.

NEW YORK, April 17.—"The government might just as well confiscate the property of the Brooklyn ball club as impose a 10 per cent tax on gross baseball receipts," Charles H. Ebbets announced today. Ebbets thinks the tax should be less than 10 per cent. "The Brooklyn club," he said, "must take in $250,000 a year before a profit can be made."

Both teams are in fine condition for the affair, and the game is expected to be a good one from start to finish.

Taylor Jolliff, premier hurler of the Spiders, will essay to turn the trick for the local collegians, while Big Chief Garnett will probably be in the box for the Indians. To the fans well acquainted with the teams in the Eastern association this means a great deal. Jolliff and Garnett are both hurlers of ability, and the contest should prove to be a pitchers' battle from start to finish.

Coach Dobson, of the Spiders, will use Ryland in right field; Carter in left, and Miller in center. The same old infield, consisting of Pitt on third; Northern on second; Liggan in short, and Crossley on first, will start against the Indians. Pearman will do the receiving for the local collegians.
