In Memoriam 2

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The death of George Washington Winston, which occurred on last Sunday, undoubtedly brought a feeling of sadness to all who knew him throughout his years of service as Head Oysterman at Rueger's.

For forty-three years George found his life work in serving men well, and earned for himself their friendship and esteem by his uniform courtesy and blue native sense of humor.

His reputation had spread beyond the confines of our country, for on one occasion, while abroad, I encountered a tourist whose lasting recollections of Richmond were of a typical Southern colored man who had served him with oysters "in some restaurant on Bank Street," and whose polite attention, coupled with kindly good humor, had made a lasting impression. He recalled only that his name was "George."

George was the first man I employed when I entered my father's business forty-three years ago, and by his true loyalty and sterling honesty throughout all these years endeared him to my heart, and his passing is like that of a member of the household.

He invariably declined the offer of being pensioned, with the remark that he preferred remaining at his old post, where he could come in daily contact with his old acquaintances and friends.

He was one of the few left of that rare "old school" of colored men whose affection and loyalty to the white race is one of the finest qualities in their character.

MAKING GOOD.

Our reconditioned cars, after they are considered ready for sale, are ready to make good.

As a result of our policy in the shop of "make sure," every rebuilt car sold from here has "made good"—and, incidentally, created a desire and purchase among others.

Making good, as we see it, is in making the car right first, then the price. This, then, is our method in rebuilt car sales. Give us the pleasure of telling you about it, without obligating yourself in the slightest.
