ESCAPES FROM PRISON

Negro, a Federal Prisoner, Is Not Yet Captured.

RECALLS TWO OTHER CASES

French Horse Thief, by Ingenious Method, Contrives to Elude Guards of Maryland Penitentiary, But Is Soon Caught—English Crook Is More Successful with Outside Aid.

Baltimore, Oct. 14.—No trace has yet been secured of Irving Talley, the negro Federal prisoner, who escaped from jail Monday.

The remarkable and successful jail breaking by Talley calls to mind two famous cases of a similar character at the Maryland Penitentiary.

The first of these was that of a French horse thief doing a long term. The prisoner was an unusually bright man, well educated and accomplished in many lines. With an ordinary jackknife he fashioned beautiful carvings, and as an artist his paintings were marvels. He did odd jobs about the penitentiary, and through this enjoyed many privileges not granted other convicts.

In the old days there was a checking system in vogue. At the end of each day as the shops in the pen were closed each convict was given a brass check, which he took to his cell with him. When the lights-out signal sounded at 9 o'clock each night, and the convicts were supposed to go to sleep, the guard on each tier passed along, and each prisoner handed out his check. These were counted regularly, and always tallied with the number of prisoners on the books. One morning the Frenchman did not appear with the other convicts.

Puts Dummy Near Door.

In his bed was found a "dummy" shaped in the form of a man. There was also found fastened to the cell door a most perfectly formed hand of wax. Search was at once made for "French," as the convict was called. After some time the convict was discovered on the roof of the old penitentiary buildings, too far away from the walls to make his escape to the street and too near the guards to run a chance of being fired on. He was put in close confinement and the story was soon learned. His freedom of the pen had given him an opportunity to gather bits of wax and putty, and in his spare moments he shaped the hand. He made a duplicate key of his cell.

When he was locked up at 6 o'clock one stormy night he went to work on the dummy with his prison clothes and straw from his mattress. To a sleeve of his shirt he fastened the false hand and placed the brass check in the bent fingers, and, leaning the "dummy" in the corner formed by the door of the cell and the wall, tied the hand so that the fingers protruded beyond the cell grating.

Then he opened the door with the duplicate key, and while the guards were below, clambered to the top of the tier and out through a window to the roof. At 9 p. m., three hours after the convicts had been locked up, the guard came along in a hurry, grabbed the check from the wax hand, counted the checks when he had finished the collection and was at ease for the night. The Frenchman had a good start, but his plan failed utterly in the end.

Has Aid from Outside.

Another remarkable and successful escape from the pen was that of John Burke, who was a Jean Valjean in real life. He was an English crook, came of good family and had only been in this country about six months when sent to prison in 1886, to do ten years for complicity in a bank robbery in this city. He was a machinist and his duties took him about the prison inclosure. He chummed with a petty thief named Lally, who was serving a short term. A plot was formed, and the day Lally was released the plans were put into execution. The drainage at the penitentiary went through large sewers into Jones Falls, under the jail yard, which adjoins the penitentiary. The main sewer opening, or pit, was guarded with heavy iron bars.

Lally, so it was learned afterward, crawled through the sewer from its outlet at the falls, under the jail yard, to the grating at the penitentiary inclosure and set to work filing the barred grating. He did his job well and left the several bars tied together with silk strands.

Burke, in his goings to and fro in the yard, soon discovered that the hour of escape was near through seeing the silken strands on the bars.

One morning Burke was missing. Search about the place produced no trace of the missing man until the severed bars of the grating were discovered. Then the mode of escape was made plain. One of the guards was sent through the 600 feet of sewer, which was filled with slime and mud, and he discovered near the Jones Falls end a suit of prison clothes, which was identified as John Burke's. Lally had the searchers that the faithful Lally had provided his friend with a suit of street clothes and possibly other means to make good his escape.

Burke was never captured, as he must have had fully twelve hours' start of his would-be captors.

THIRTEEN HOODOO BEATEN.

Dancer Weds Baltimore Man 37 Seconds Before Midnight.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 14.—Mlle. Dazie, the dancer, who achieved international fame by always wearing a red mask while both on and off the stage, was married in New York just before midnight Friday night to Mark A. Leuscher, manager of Albaugh's Theater here.

They beat the time limit to the "13" hoodoo by thirty-seven seconds, and then only after a series of exciting happenings. La Belle Dazie, who became conspicuous as La Domino Rouge, arrived in New York from London Thursday morning.

At dinner Thursday evening Leuscher wanted to marry. It was late—after 11—but La Belle Dazie was game.

11:20—Party arrived at the Little Church Around the Corner and found three couples undergoing treatment for marriage. "Couldn't make it in time," said the rector.

11:22—"Go back to Rector's and get a private room," cried Leuscher to Louis Werb, his friend. "I'll hunt an alderman."

11:23—Alderman Hatton discovered and torn from a dinner of beefsteak and beer, promised beefsteak and champagne.

11:35—Party arrives at Rector's.

11:46—Opening of ceremonies.

11:59-25—closing of ceremonies.

Hoodoo beat out by 37 seconds.

Mlle. Dazie was born in Detroit. Her real name was Peterkin before Leuscher discovered La Domino Rouge was a money getter and created a furore with her in the metropolis.

Fell from Wagon.

Johnny Deach, six years old, of 1302 Emmerson street northeast, while riding on the rear end of a wagon driven by Clarence Ludwig, 2652 Seventh street northwest, fell off and was run over by Otto Nelson, 1238 G street northwest, on a bicycle. He was sent to his home with a cut on the nose and body bruises.

REWARDS FOR MURDERERS.

Local Department Asked to Watch for Slayers of Policemen.

"Wanted cards" for two negroes who are accused of cold-blooded murders of policemen have been received by Capt. Boardman, of the local police department.

Five hundred dollars reward is offered by the Indianapolis (Ind.) authorities for the apprehension of Jesse Coe, who killed Patrolman Charles Russell on the night of September 30, and $200 for information leading to his arrest. Coe is thirty-two years old, 5 feet 6, 140 to 150 pounds, brown skin, smooth face, high cheekbones, scrofula scar about two inches long on left side of neck, near jaw.

Chief of Police Dyer, of Roanoke, Va., wants John Hardy, colored, for killing Officer R. M. Beard on the morning of October 12. Hardy is described as follows: Twenty-five years old, dark gingercake color, six feet, smooth face, medium build, high cheekbones, sharp chin, gunshot wound on person; one leg has been injured, making him knock-kneed.
