THE BIRTHDAY OF IDAHO

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN

Idaho, the gem of the mountains, is seventeen years old to-day, having been admitted to the Union of States on July 3, 1890, during the administration of the learned Benjamin Harrison. But two States in the sisterhood are younger, Wyoming by eight days, and Utah by six years, Oklahoma's status still being undetermined. The industrial progress of Idaho has been keeping step with the prosperity of the nation, but even now, with an area ten times more than Massachusetts, it has a population only half as great as the city of Boston. On the slopes of the Rockies in Idaho there are areas larger than Connecticut that have never been surveyed or prospected.

Seventeen-year-old Idaho has had an eventful history since she became a State, as well as during the thirty years before. When Hiram Pierce discovered the placer gold mines of the Clearwater in 1860, a host of gold seekers abandoned California and Nevada for the new El Dorado. Two years later, when the Boise mines were found, the prospect of riches attracted hosts of miners, prospectors, adventurers, and criminals—many of them desiring to escape service in the civil war. These bad men ruled the new mining settlements by terror. In Boise alone there were twenty murders in a few months during 1864 and nothing could be done about it.

But the better class of people drew many recruits from the East at the close of the war and peaceful government was begun, mining was soon supplemented by other callings, and Idaho lived in comparative peace. In March, 1863, the Territory of Idaho, containing all of what is now Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, was set off by Congress from parts of the Territories of Washington, Nebraska, and Dacotah. The capital was set up at Lewiston, in the northern part of the Territory. When the bill for the creation of the Territory passed the House of Representatives the name was "Montana," but at the suggestion of Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, it was changed to "Idaho." It is interesting to note in this connection that the first measure for the creation of the Territory of Colorado provided that it be named "Idaho," as Idaho Springs was a leading settlement of the country. Some other reason prevailed, however, and it was named for a river which belongs to other States.

Idaho is the I-dah-o of the Indians, meaning the jeweled mountain tops from which the sunrise came to illumine the earth, and no other mountains in the world can claim a better right to this poetical designation than the snow-clad peaks that mark the eastern border of the State of Idaho. Joaquin Miller tells the story that when the party led by Hiram Pierce was approaching the spot where the first gold was found, an Indian guide pointed to the mountain to the east of them and said "I-dah-o." Pierce then declared that I-dah-o should be the name of the country. George B. Walker, some time a member of Congress from Seattle, is probably entitled to the credit of having the name preserved as the designation of one of the sovereign States of the American Union.

While the settlement of Idaho did not begin until the '60's, efforts had been made long before. The first white settlement in the State was made by Nathaniel J. Wyeth at Fort Hall in 1834. Two years later the Presbyterian missionaries, Dr. Marcus Whitman and H. H. Spaulding, came to convert the Indians. Jesuits from Canada had before attempted to found missions, but they were not permanent. Mormons from Utah made an unsuccessful attempt to found a town in the southern portion of the State. The rigors of the winters, the distance from a base of supplies, and the hostility of some of the Indians made it difficult for any of these early settlements to prosper. When gold was found it was a different story.

The last gold excitement in Idaho was the rush to Thunder Mountain, which occurred a few years ago, when the country was electrified by the story of a mountain of gold being uncovered in the wilds. In the heart of an almost inaccessible region, where the earth is fearfully ripped and slashed by those awful upheavals which made mountains and the dizzy canyons between them, the Caswell twins, roving hunters and gold seekers, stumbled across a place where there was a leak from the hidden treasure chest of Nature. The Caswells were easy-going chaps, more fond of chasing grizzlies than panning creeks, so when their find netted then $245 worth of precious metal, they said nothing about it, but went back to their hunting and fishing until the freshet of another spring should provide water with which to make easy work of washing out more gold. For several years the twins kept their secret. One season they took out $100, another $900, and finally washed out $11,000 worth of treasure in a few weeks' time. They took $150 from one pan in twenty minutes.

Of course, all this could not go on without eventually creating a stir, and the usual rush to the scene of such discoveries set in. Thunder Mountain is one of the most out-of-the-way localities in the United States. It was 150 miles from a railroad by the nearest route, which led over mountains almost as steep as house-tops. Despite this fact the heart-breaking trail to the new Golconda became congested with gold-hungry men. To scale those forbidding peaks was a fearful strain on the muscles of man and beast, but they went over. At the foot of a great rift in the mountains a huge snowdrift was replaced by the white topped cabins of the town of Roosevelt. Five Idaho towns, all about the same distance from the new camp, entered into spirited rivalry to secure the rich profit derived from outfitting those who were starting on the adventurous journey to the foot of the rainbow. New recruits came in numbers, and the new camp was soon straggling along for three miles in its walled canyon. Then the reaction set in. The boom collapsed with its back broken from its own weight. Those who had rushed so frantically in took the back trail in a gallop. The tri-weekly mail brought many letters which had to be carried back on the return trip, the chipmunks had the undisturbed run of many empty cabins, and the chroniclers had to tell the disappointing story of the bursting of another bubble.

Idaho politics have been of the red-hot variety from the beginning of the Territorial government. At the very beginning there was a great fight over the capital, the legislature having voted to remove it from Lewiston to Boise. An injunction was procured to prevent the transfer of the seal and archives, and a writ sued out to prevent the governor, Caleb Lyon, of Lyonsdale, from leaving the State. At that season of the year it was impracticable to go from Lewiston to Boise except by a long detour through Washington and Oregon. The governor accepted the service of the writ, but he insisted that he had a right to go duck hunting. He got in a skiff with his secretary and the current was so rapid that they could not control the boat. It took them down the Snake River to a place where, by strange chance, they found a buggy, which took them to Walla Walla, from whence they journeyed by stage to Boise. This is how the capital was moved.

The prevailing religion of the State of Idaho is Mormonism. At the time the State was admitted to the Union this was not the case, and anti-Mormon sentiment ran strong. The Mormons were disfranchised by the constitution, and a severe test oath was administered by which a voter was compelled to deny belief in or practice of the doctrine of plural marriage as taught by the Mormons. Fred. T. Du Bois, the Territorial Delegate whose eloquence won Statehood for Idaho, then a Republican, declared that he would prefer that Idaho should forever be kept out of the Union if the Mormons were not to be controlled. Last winter, just as his term as a Democratic Senator from Idaho was expiring, Mr. Du Bois led the anti-Mormon fight against the seating of Apostle Reed Smoot as Senator from Utah. In the meantime, however, the theories of Du Bois had been overthrown, the Mormons were given the ballot, and they soon assumed a controlling place in State politics.

Senator Du Bois was the leader of the Republican party in the State, and when the gold and silver controversy of 1896 came on he led his followers out of the St. Louis convention which nominated McKinley. The majority of the Republicans of the State clung to him, a Silver Republican party was organized, and the State went Democratic. After six years of stormy politics the power went again into the hands of the Republicans, where it is now lodged.

Boise is the metropolis of the State. The territory it commands is so vast that if it was situated at Buffalo, N. Y., it would command the country from Chicago to Portland, Me. Time was when Boise, being way out West, was easy-going and altogether lacking in class distinction. The wife of the mayor and the head waitress of the hotel met on terms of equality in the same quadrille at the weekly ball. In those good old free and easy times the young men wore their hats and smoked as the dance progressed, and if a girl winced when cigar ashes fell on her bare shoulder it was a sure sign that she was a tenderfoot. But all that is past. The girls now go away to boarding school and bring back with them all the mannerisms of the effete East. It was a hard thing to establish class lines and separate the sheep from the goats, but half the town now dances on Tuesday night and the other half on Thursday.

The board walk and the blue wool shirt are matters of ancient history in Boise. Now it has automobiles and Panama hats and polite vaudeville. Not long ago I happened to be there during a celebration, and as the parade went by a big woman who was from the sage brush country, but who looked mighty well fed for a child of the desert, leaned up against a barber pole and, between the swishes of her giant palm leaf fan, ventured to remark: "Boise is sure a good place to come to." The cowboy who was reclining against the opposite side of the pole replied: "Yes, lady, but I've been here all day and I ain't seen a single gun play." A great change had indeed come over Boise when it could celebrate without somebody "shooting up the town."

To-morrow—The Fourth of July.

PREVENT A JAIL DELIVERY

Richmond's Alleged Baggage Thieves Have Plans Spoiled.

Only Waiting for Night When Taken from Cells, Which Had Been Cut to Pieces.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Richmond, Va., July 2.—While awaiting the advent of another night to escape, Louis Rogers, Harry Allan, and Edith Allan, the latter a former Broadway actress, and the alleged wife of Allan, all of whom are accused of being members of the gang said to have robbed the trunk railway lines of the country of $200,000 worth of valuable baggage within the past two years, were yesterday taken from the special cages in which they have been confined, and it was discovered that the cages, notwithstanding the fact that the builders of the jail claimed the steel used in their construction could not be cut with any instrument known, were literally cut to pieces.

The trio had a confederate working in their behalf in the city, as well as one among the jail "trusties" on the inside, William Landrum, a prisoner serving a short sentence, was the inside confederate. He received the tools from the outside and passed them to the prisoners. Landrum was discovered at this work Saturday night, and in place of being a free man, as he had expected, to-day, he is under arrest, charged with aiding and abetting an attempt to escape.

Suspicion was aroused by a letter from the New York counsel for the prisoners, which it was stated that no further effort would be made to secure bail for the woman.

CAPT. BERKELEY'S WIFE DIES.

Marine Officer Was Only Married to Her in September.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Staunton, Va., July 2.—Word reached here last night from Norfolk announcing the sudden death of Mrs. Carrie Phillips Berkeley, wife of Capt. Randolph C. Berkeley, of the United States Marine Corps, formerly a resident of this city.

Mrs. Berkeley was the only daughter of Pay Inspector and Mrs. James S. Phillips, of the United States Navy, and was twenty-two years of age. She was married to Capt. Berkeley September 12, last, in Shepherdstown, W. Va.

LIGHTNING DESTROYS STORE.

Young Man Had Just Begun Business in Laurel Hill.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Staunton, Va., July 2.—Charles Livick, a young man who had recently established a general merchandise business at Laurell Hill, near this city, lost his entire stock of goods and the building in which he conducted his store last night by fire.

During the severe electrical storm at 10 o'clock the store was struck by lightning and was soon but a smouldering pile of ashes. The loss is about $2,000.

DEMOCRATS TO HAVE PRIMARY

Will Vote for State Senator from Alexandria District.

Judge Waddill Sentences Two Offenders and Reappoints Commissioner Garnett.

WASHINGTON HERALD BUREAU,
(Bell Telephone 113.)
529 King Street.

Alexandria, Va., July 2.—Announcement was made to-day that a Democratic primary will be held September 10, next, to nominate a candidate to represent the Fourteenth senatorial district in the State senate. All candidates must submit their names thirty days before the primary to the chairman of the Democratic committee of the district. It is understood that in case there is no contest the trouble and expense of holding an election will be obviated by a vote of the committee, declaring the one candidate the nominee. Up to the present, State Senator Lewis H. Machen, of this city, is the only candidate, and it is said to be unlikely that another candidate will enter the field.

This district is composed of the counties of Prince William, Fairfax, and Alexandria and the city of Alexandria. Arrangements for the primary are in the mands of a general committee, of which Charles Bendheim, of this city, is chairman, and Curtis B. Graham, of Alexandria County, secretary.

Judge Waddill Sentences Two.

In the United States Court for the Eastern district of Virginia to-day, Judge Waddill sentenced Bernard Branon, indicted for breaking open a mail box in Culpeper County, to serve fifteen days in the jail in this city. The prisoner entered a plea of guilty, and the court took into account the fact that the man had already served considerable time in jail. A plea of guilty was also made by J. Elmore Williams, colored, who was indicted for forging a check on the postmaster at Manassas. Williams was sentenced to serve one year at the reform school at Hanover.

Judge Waddill reappointed Clerk R. P. W. Garnett United States commissioner at this city. Judge Waddill said Mr. Garnett had discharged his duties with faithfulness and efficiency.

The court will adjourn to-morrow for the term.

Mrs. Kate Ramey Buried.

The funeral of Mrs. Kate Ramey, whose death occurred Sunday, was held this afternoon from Grace Episcopal Church. The services were conducted by Rev. Edgar Carpenter, and the interment was made in the Presbyterian Cemetery. The pallbearers were Thomas Padgett, Orbia Padgett, W. C. Ramey, R. Bisson, James Deavers, and James Cox.

C. B. Graham Reappointed.

Judge Barley, in the County Circuit Court, to-day reappointed Curtis B. Graham commissioner of revenue for the county, for a term of four years. After disposing of some minor cases court adjourned for the term.

Mrs. Elizabeth Javins Dead.

Mrs. Elizabeth Javins died this morning at the home of her husband, Clinton Javins, in Fairfax County, near this city. She was twenty-five years of age, and was a daughter of William Hartbower. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock from Sharon Chapel.

Work was resumed to-day on the George R. Hill Memorial Building, M. E. Church South, the places of the striking hodcarriers having been filled by other men.

Miss Lilian W. McKenney, daughter of William J. McKenney, died this morning at the Alexandria Hospital of typhoid fever. She was fourteen years of age.

WEST VIRGINIA'S DAY

Secretary Cortelyou Orator at the Exposition.

HE CONDEMNS ITS CRITICS

Slow Progress in the Beginning the Rule with World's Fairs, He Declares, and Not Peculiar to the Jamestown Show—Praises the State and Touches on National Issues.

Special to The Washington Herald

Jamestown Exposition, Va., July 2.—George B. Cortelyou, Secretary of the Treasury, made the principal address George B. Cortelyou, Secretary of the great column of coal, 123½ feet high, erected by the State of West Virginia. Gov. Dawson, the State's representative in the National Senate and House, and many other public officials attended the celebration.

After speaking in terms of highest praise of the progress made by West Virginia along the lines of industry and commerce, the secretary, touching upon national topics, said:

"Our people continue prosperous. We, of course, have our occasional setbacks, and quite recently have had some rather sharp reminders that wrong-doing and improvidence and inflation have an inevitable result—disaster in greater or less degree. The readjustment of values in certain lines of trade, whether of securities or other holdings, will prove a blessing if restricted within reasonable bounds, but it must be understood that the American people are alive to their rights and privileges, and however much opinions may differ as to policies and methods in securing honest government, clear politics and straightforward business, this much is certain—the people will have those things, and they will make short shrift of any man in public life whose career points in a hostile direction.

"While there are some disquieting features in the business world, the outlook is growing steadily brighter, and if we but keep our heads, and approach our State and national problems with courage and common sense, we shall have in the future, a prosperity not only material, but moral, greater even than that which has made memorable our recent past."

Condemns the Pessimists.

In a short talk at the parade ground, preceding his official address, Mr. Cortelyou severely condemned those critics who have endeavored to describe the exposition. He said:

"The Jamestown Exposition, while in many features unlike its predecessors is like them in this respect, that there have been at the outset some unfavorable comment and some adverse criticism. Like all great undertakings, it has had its initial embarrassments, and from time to time we have heard from the critics, some at least of whom belong to the class of individuals who believe that they must lend encouragement only to what is an achieved success rather than to that which has in it the elements of success.

"We have seen others of our expositions pass through these stages, and we have seen them develop into enterprises of great national and international worth.

"But the pessimist is always with us. While we easily shake him off, he may disturb us for a time, for he thrives on the beginning of great undertakings, and expositions are his particular aversion. They evidence progress, and substantial progress in any line of human activity leaves him without a text and with rather poor material for a respectable audience. He would be woefully out of place here today, for I believe from what I have already seen and the enthusiasm manifested by the loyal people who are coming here in increasing numbers, that the country is realizing that we can have in this beautiful Southland an exposition of unusual significance and of great commercial and educational value.

"Your presence shows not only your loyalty to your State, but your faith in this exposition."

RICHMOND TAKES GAME.

Lynchburg Loses on Wild Pitch by Eckstone in Sixth.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Lynchburg, Va., July 2.—Brilliant work, poor playing, and yellow umpiring characterized the game here this afternoon, but Richmond won by better stick work. In the first the visitors completed a squeeze on a bunt that never was fair, but it was declared so by Hoffner. Aside from decisions against him, Eckstone really lost his game on a wild pitch in the sixth, which scored the winning run. Score:

DIVIDE A DOUBLE-HEADER.

Norfolk Takes First in Eleven Innings; Danville Gets the Second.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Danville, Va., July 2.—Norfolk took the first of the double-header this afternoon, while Danville had a walk-over for the second. Otey, pitcher for the visitors, was in fine form, and had not allowed a safe hit up to the seventh inning, when he allowed two singles and a home run in succession. Henn parked the ball, giving Danville her only three runs in the seventh inning. Pitcher Comminger, for the locals, was relieved by Walker. Norfolk won in the eleventh as the result of an error, a sacrifice, and a long fly, scoring the runner from third. Score:

The second game was an old-time slugging match, and Pitcher Fox, for Norfolk, was hit almost at will. Loucks, for Danville, was master of the situation at all stages. The Tobacconists made another home run in this game. Powell parked the ball in the second inning with two men on bases. The hitting of Powell, Henn, and Cummings, and the fielding of Seitz and Doyle were features. Score:
