MINES EXPLODED IN POTOMAC RIVER

Navy Holds Practice Near Piscataway Creek for Benefit of Marines—Trials Successful.

The Potomac River, from the mouth of Piscataway Creek almost to Indian Head, was the practice ground of the navy yesterday. From early morning until night that stretch of the river was the scene of such warlike operations that the casual observer, knowing nothing of what was going on might have been led to believe that a revolution had broken out in Lower Maryland.

The matter was not as serious as that, however, the activities of the navy being confined to the planting of mines, in order to give practical demonstrations of the science and accustom the marines to the duty.

Mines containing guncotton were planted in the bed of the river and exploded to give an opportunity for practice and to test the mines.

Navy launches from the Washington Navy Yard and from the proving grounds at Indian Head were stationed along the river to warn passing vessels against too near approach to the danger zone. The tests were considered successful by navy officers.
