THE PULLMAN CAR RACKET.

How Johnnie Graham Worked It on Unsuspecting Colored Women.

Johnnie Graham is now in jail awaiting the action of the grand jury. He has been there more than two weeks, and unless bail is given for him he is likely to remain there until late in the winter season and perhaps take a trip to New York at government expense. The charge upon which he was sent to jail was forgery, but since his incarceration Detective Mahon has succeeded in implicating him in some other cases, and they will now be called to the attention of the grand jury. Graham is a colored man, not yet thirty years old, and he wears clothes that would look well on a person of plenty of means. John had no hesitation in telling the officer about the truth of the forgery case, and reminded the officer of the hard road he had traveled. He has been arrested a number of times and served several terms in jail, in addition to a term of one year in Albany. In consideration of these facts John asked the officer to do him a favor.

"I have done you favors in the past," said the officer, "and it's now pretty near time you were doing something for me."

"What is it?" asked the prisoner, who said he was anxious to get out in time for the races.

"Do you know the man who has been doing the Pullman car racket?" the officer asked him.

HE KNEW THE MAN.

"Yes indeed," was the reply of the negro. "I saw him last night. I was out with him and we had a drink together."

"What sort of a looking man is he?"

Graham described a man whom he could see only by looking in a glass. "He dresses in a tailor-made suit of clothes, wears a light overcoat, a brown derby hat and square-toed patent leather shoes.

"He's a dandy," remarked the negro.

Just then he tore an envelope in two and was about to throw it away, when the officer relieved him of the trouble by taking it from him and putting it in his own pocket. He thought no more about it until two or three days ago, when he took the pieces of paper from his pocket and read on the envelope:

"R. R. Supply Co." Upon the paper which was inside the envelope was written:

"Please let me have this as soon as you can.

"CHIEF STEWARD, Car 25, Penna. R. R."

Following this was what purported to be the measurements of a woman who wanted a position in the Pullman service. It was: "Bust, 83; waist, 25; front, 15½; back, 18; length, 42; neck, 13½; arms, 26½. When done send to car 25, P. R. R."

This satisfied the officer that Graham was the man wanted for the Pullman car jobs, and, in the language of detective officers, he decided to "pinch" him once more.

HOW THE TRICK WAS WORKED.

The Pullman car trick was one of the many ingenious stories such as no one other than a confidence man would ever dream of. The negro who took the tricks, as the crooks would call it, called at the house of a number of colored women and relieved each of them of a few dollars. He would tell them that he would get them positions as chambermaids on the cars at $60 a month if their measurements were all right, and of course they were, as that was a part of the game. These women were induced to believe that they had really been appointed and not one of them hesitated to give the confidence man $5 or $10 toward paying for the uniform which they were to get. At one house he got $5 from a woman and would have got considerably more from her brother-in-law had his pocket book been a little better filled at that time. But after he had gone the young woman's mother told her that "dat nigger is too smart fo' you and he done got your money and gone."

GRAHAM IDENTIFIED.

Having satisfied himself that Graham was the confidence man the detective had him brought up from jail yesterday for identification. The prisoner never suspected that that was why he was being brought up, and so he dressed in his best clothes to make a good showing in court. He had on the square-toed shoes that he had spoken of as well as the light coat over the good suit of clothes and the brown derby hat on his head. It did not take a second glance for the women to identify him, and had he been outside of the prison bars they would no doubt have tried their hands at giving him a thrashing.

After being so completely identified he admitted that he worked the racket in this city, but he denied that he had operated in Baltimore, although a man answering his description did operate there pretty extensively at the same game. One of his pictures has been sent to Baltimore and the officer is fully satisfied that it will be identified there.

Claims $10,000 Damages.

A suit for $10,000 damages to a passenger has been filed against the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, the plaintiff being Richard Bumbrey, and his attorneys Messrs. Campbell Carrington and Irving Williamson. The plaintiff states that he is nearly entirely blind and he was received by the defendants' agent on a car at 6th street and Pennsylvania avenue on May 24, 1889, to be carried to the corner of 8th and G streets southeast, and requested the conductor to put him off at that point; that by reason of his eyesight more care should have been taken, and the conductor neglected to put him off at G street and carried him to a point between K and L streets southeast. He states that he told the conductor that if put off there he would be lost and be unable to find his way home, and he offered to ride to the end of the route and ride back to G street, paying an extra fare, but the conductor declared that he should ride no further and took him by the throat, pushed him against the brake and dragged him from the cars, by which grievance a blood vessel was broken and he was badly bruised, made sick and sore, and in endeavoring to be cured has expended $100, and he claims $10,000 damages.

It Was a Rat, Not a Burglar.

About 12:30 o'clock Tuesday morning two men went to the residence of Lieut. John F. Kelly, No. 31 G street northwest, and awakened him to ask for assistance in capturing a burglar, who they were certain they heard in the dining room of 721 North Capitol street gathering up the table ware. The lieutenant suggested to them that if they found officers on the street they should go to the station. The parties left, evidently puzzled at the coolness of the lieutenant, but soon found Officers Mendenhall and Bateman and went to the house to investigate. They found the cause of the alarm to be a large-sized rat, which had reached the table and was searching around among knives, forks and spoons for sustenance. After a laugh all round the rat hole in which Mr. Rodent had retired was stopped up and the household returned to their couches.
