LONG TOM BROUGHT.

Arrival of the Famous Gun of the General Armstrong.

The famous gun, "Long Tom," which played such a part in the history of this country in the war of 1812, arrived in New York late last night on board the Portuguese steamship Vega, Capt. Ross, from Lisbon via the Azore Islands. The Vega came into port with her decks covered with snow.

"Long Tom" is a forty-two pounder, and did great service for the Union while mounted on the private armed brig General Armstrong. The gun was brought over from Fayal, where it had been mounted in the castle of Santa Cruz for the last seventy-nine years.

It was the intention of this government to send one of our ships of war over for the gun, but as no warship was available Messrs. Bensaude & Co. of the Insular Navigation Steamship Company of Lisbon offered to bring it over free of charge and the proposition was accepted.

This relic of the last war with England was once a part of the armament of the French line of battle ship Hoche, which was captured in October, 1798, by a British squadron under Sir John B. Warren and sent into an English port, where she was dismantled. Her armament was afterward sold, her main battery of 42-pounders being purchased by John B. Murray of New York, who then happened to be in England, and was shipped to New York.

These guns were subsequently sold to the United States government and mounted in the harbor of New York. One gun of this battery, the present "Long Tom," was rejected on account of an indentation at the muzzle, caused by a solid shot, and was retained by Mr. Murray, who had it reamed out so as not to affect the bore.

Mr. Murray, by a contract with the Emperor of Hayti, fitted out three vessels of war at New York in 1804 for the defense of that island in the conflict with France, one of which was the Sampson, Capt. Palmer, of fourteen guns, and the rejected "Long Tom" was mounted on a pivot on the forward deck and did great execution in the conflict with the French privateers.

The Sampson afterward returned to New York and was disarmed. "Long Tom" being dismounted, and it lay idle until war was declared against England in 1812.

ON THE ARMSTRONG.

While the forces of England's mighty hosts were concentrating to strike a blow to conquer Louisiana and the south a little brigantine of only 246 tons, called the General Armstrong, was being refitted and remanned for a cruise against the enemy. Her commander was Capt. Samuel Chester Reid. The Armstrong carried six long nines, with "Long Tom" amidships, making seven guns, with a total crew of ninety men and officers.

The Armstrong ran through the blockade of the British on the night of September 9, 1814.

On September 26, 1814, at noon, the Armstrong ran into the bay of the town of Horta, in the island of Fayal, to refill with water.

At sundown a British squadron under Commodore Robert Lloyd hove in sight, being on its way to reinforce Cochrane's fleet at Jamaica.

There was a tremendous encounter, in which the little privateer fought the entire squadron. The Americans would not surrender, and after their vessel was rendered helpless they retreated to the shore in good order. "Long Tom" did terrible work. It took the English ten days to bury their dead. Their loss numbered 200 killed and wounded, while the American loss was only two killed and seven wounded.

The British fleet was delayed so long at Fayal that the movement against Louisiana proved unsuccessful. Gen. Jackson being able to win the memorable battle at New Orleans. "Long Tom" has laid dismantled in Fayal for nearly a quarter of a century.

The return of the gun to the United States was arranged through Col. Samuel C. Reid of this city, who was Fayal in 1890. Col. Reid is the son of the commander of the Armstrong. He went to Fayal with a view of obtaining a sketch of the harbor and bay for his work on the memoirs of his father. When he visited the castle of Santa Cruz he saw "Long Tom." On his return to Washington he induced President Harrison to cause our then minister to Lisbon, Gen. Batchelder, to be instructed to request the transfer of the gun to this government, to which the King of Portugal, Dom Carlos I, consented.

Burning Garbage at Home.

To the Editor of The Evening Star:

"How to dispose of garbage" seems to be a puzzling question with many people, and among those who claim to be wiseacres no two seem to agree in all particulars. Your contributor, "W. H. S.," in his article in yesterday's STAR, under the head of "A Way to Dispose of Garbage," offers the most sensible and practicable suggestions which have, as yet, appeared on this vexatious question. He, it seems, would have every kitchen range or stove converted into a garbage crematory. This plan of disposing of kitchen refuse is by no means original with "W. H. S." My wife has practiced it for years. Nearly everything in the character of kitchen offal which will burn goes into the range or stove fire.

But our plan differs slightly from that of "W. H. S." He would consign all such refuse directly to the fire bed. This is not our method with substances that are more or less water soaked, such as potato and apple parings, cabbage leaves, &c. In nearly every cooking stove or range there is an unoccupied space immediately back of the fire bed and over the top oven plate, between it and the upper stove plate. Through this space all gases and smoke pass on their exit to the chimney or smoke flue. Our plan is to lift a lid and place all such substances as those named, which contain water or liquid matter which would tend to clog or deaden the fire if thrown directly into it, often to the annoyance of the cook, on top of the oven plate between it and the lids above. In a few minutes the heat which always accompanies the smoke from the fire converts the water into vapor, which, with any offensive gases and odors, passes with the smoke out of the chimney. The substance which remains is now dry, forming a very good fuel, and without trouble can be pushed back into the fire. A few trials of this method will convince even the most thick-headed and obstinate of kitchen servants that this plan of disposing of kitchen refuse is attended with less trouble than to lug such stuff away to the garbage receptacle, where it is likely to remain for days undergoing a process of fermentation and filling the surrounding atmosphere with injurious and offensive gases and odors.

Kitchen refuse of almost any kind, whether containing water or not, even to small bones, may readily be disposed of in the manner described. The most serious objection to the general adoption of this method would probably come from garbage men and health boards, who would in large measure be deprived of their occupation. It will hardly be expected of such to fully indorse the plan suggested by "W. H. S." and approved by

F. S. W.

Assignment of Admirals.

In the possible event that Rear Admiral Gherardi, after the close of the naval review, shall be assigned to duty as superintendent of the Naval Academy it is understood that Rear Admiral Benham will be given command of the North Atlantic squadron and Admiral Walker be placed in command of the Boston navy yard. If it can be accomplished, however, Admiral Gherardi will command the North Atlantic squadron and Admiral Benham the European squadron.

A Colt's Growth Is Not a Manufacture.

Assistant Secretary Hamlin has decided a peculiar case. An American citizen moved to Canada temporarily, carrying with him his effects, among which was a colt two months old. He returned two years after and the collector at Cape Vincent, N. Y., charged him duty on the colt as the colt had materially advanced in value. Mr. Hamlin decides that in such circumstances when the value of animals had been increased by natural growth and not by "any process of manufacture or other means" animals of domestic origin were entitled to free entry.

The Supreme Court Will Not Go.

After due deliberation the Supreme Court has decided to decline the invitations to visit the naval rendezvous at Hampton Roads as well as the review in New York and the opening of the world's fair. The condition of the business of the Supreme Court and the inroads upon its work which these excursions would make moved the court to its determination to stay at home. The day set for adjournment is next Tuesday, and if the justices of the court traveled down to Hampton Roads to hear and see the big guns, living and inanimate, a large section would be taken from the little time left for this term.

Surrendered to Great Britain.

The Secretary of State has issued a warrant for the surrender to the British authorities of Wm. W. Lewis and Thos. H. Lewis, now in custody in New York city, whose extradition is asked for on charges of fraud while acting as directors of a public corporation in England.
