FRYING.

Oysters, Croquettes, Chicken, Cod-Fish Balls and Fritters.

Such were the edibles served to Mrs. Ewing's cooking class Thursday afternoon, and the subject—frying—Mrs. Ewing declares is as common as important and as shocking of treating, but it is here made digestible and is much to be relished. An efficient paper was read on frying "No food ever properly digested and is assimilated unless it is relished in the eating."

Beside beginning her lecture Mrs. Ewing showed the class a large piece of cheesecloth which she passed around the room, and showed how it could be used to strain fat, and how it could be used over and over again, if washed first in cold water.

The morning papers contained an article dealing in a manner not flattering to the cooking profession, and Mrs. Ewing remarked that it was very greatly to be wished that it should be
