Sympathetic with Boers—Sale of Dakota Furniture—Notes of Consequence in London Society.

London, Dec. 9.—(Special cable letter.)—Certainly, yes, by the Boers. Mr. Fraser, a representative of the Associated Press, has discovered the whereabouts of Mr. Montagu White, the gentleman who, after the recent weeks with Dr. Leyds in Brussels, has returned to his native Pretoria. Mr. White is in the employ of the Transvaal government. He is not an official consular agent, however, but is in the service of the Boers. He has been in Europe in the United States, and is known to many who sympathize with them. He has been in Johannesburg, where he has a good property, which the war is likely to make valueless. Mr. White intends to go back to his holdings as soon as he can, believing the war will wreck the town and mines in the surrounding.

Speaking of Dr. Leyds, said Mr. White, he (Leyds) is in close connection with President Kruger, and I am inclined to speak definitely regarding the Boer opinion of the war. I do believe, from what I know, that either side would have had a great deal more than it ever dreamed of in the event of a war between President McKinley and President Kruger. President McKinley is not to be accepted. President Kruger will not surrender until the last ditch and that will not be reached for further and further, far harder than I have ever dreamed the contrary. Even if President Kruger wishes to surrender he could not do so. The Boers alone would prevent it. The women, though usually gentle and retiring little people in the face of war, are actuated by a spirit which, perhaps, is more serious for that the Boer commandos. The Boer public is only just beginning to realize the gravity of the situation. The women are sorely disappointed at the outcome of the war. When the fighting is over, however, the Boers will be the same people as before
