INCREASED THE FLOW OF WATER

Volume and Temperature of the Springs are Greater.

THE RECENT EARTHQUAKE

Is Supposed to be Responsible for This Phenomenon, Although Such Has Occurred Before.

This morning the report came to town from the Warm Springs that as a consequence of the recent earthquake shock the stream at the springs had been increased as to volume, and heightened in temperature. Acting upon that rumor a representative of the "News" was sent out to the Warm Springs to ascertain the facts in the matter.

The attendants at the springs assured him that the report was founded on facts, that a most perceptible increase in the volume of the flow had taken place, and the temperature of the water had risen several degrees.

With reference to the change being the result of the earthquake the authorities at the springs would not venture an opinion, yet one point strongly in favor of that theory is the fact that the change followed so close after the shock, it being only the next day that some of the regular bathers at the springs perceived the difference.

Yet the increase in the volume of the stream and the augmented temperature is not necessarily due to the shock, as both of these conditions have fluctuated in the past, the flow at times being been much larger than it is now since its recent enhancement.

Whatever theory be correct, it is quite a satisfactory fact that the increase in the volume of the flow came almost immediately after the recent disturbance.

The stream has not varied since the first day after the shock, and the temperature also has remained stationary. Another difference that has been discovered in the water is an increase in its strength, there being much more mineral in the water now than heretofore.

AMUSEMENTS.

The friends of the University Dramatic club came out in strong numbers last night to greet them in their new production of the "Wicker Sex." The play is by that elegant writer, A. W. Pinero, who has furnished some of the most beautiful comedies known to the English stage. "The Weaker Sex," was, there, was brought out in London by Mr. and Mrs. Kendal. It is an interesting play, fashioned on rather satirical lines, the theme being female suffrage. With several new stories running through. The choice of such a play was an ambitious one, and it is greatly to the credit of the players and their instructor, Miss Babcock, that they were able to make so much of it. The honors of the evening were carried off by Miss Barnum, Miss Boyer and Miss Holbrook. Miss Barnum is an excellent reader, Miss Boyer is something more than an amateur, and Miss Holbrook has decided comedy talent. Miss Thomas played the daughter very sweetly, and the other ladies filled in acceptably. While the gentlemen were hardly up to the standard of the ladies, they acquitted themselves well generally. Mr. Abbes comedy creation being the most positive. Mr. Richards played Sir Chester earnestly, and Mr. Best enacted the part with correct feeling. Mr. Gibbs portraying the swell quite artistically, and the others lending acceptable support in small parts. The play was produced with the new Gilbertie effects of darkening the stage at the rise and fall of the curtains. While they were novel, they gave an effect of abruptness which was not entirely pleasant. The piece was received with great favor by the audience, and a curtain call was accorded after the strongest scene.

Mr. Mulvey's attraction next week, four nights with matinees on Christmas and Wednesday, will be Miss Clara Thropp in the "Doll's House."

TRUNK CAUSED MUCH TROUBLE.

Suit in Judge Cherry's Court Which Had a Beginning in 1893.

MILLINER'S TRUNK SEIZED

By Sheriff McQuarrie Brings on a Suit for Damages and It Still Drags Along.

The trial of the case of Berlena Gray vs Ex-Sheriff William McQuean and his sureties, R. C. Chambers and Richard Mackintosh, was resumed in Judge Cherry's court this morning.

It seems that in June, 1893, Jones & Schroeder brought suit against the plaintiff to recover his for services as her attorneys. The lady, who had been conducting a millinery store on Five Points street, known as Berlena's, notified Jones & Schroeder that she had disposed of her business and was going to Chicago the next day, and upon her return would pay the $50 claim. Her trunk, it seems, was attached at the depot by the sheriff under an attachment issued by Jones & Schroeder, and was finally sold by the officer to satisfy the judgment.

Berlena Gordena brought suit to recover $250, the value of the trunk and contents, and Justice Sells gave judgment in her favor for $113 and costs. The plaintiff, not satisfied with this amount, took an appeal.

The testimony this morning was to retains to the sale and the proceedings under which the sale was made.

Ex-Sheriff McQuean testified that most of the papers in the case had been lost, but the whole proceeding was regular throughout. He knew that he sold a large trunk at the auction, but couldn't say whether it was out glass or not. There were some cups and saucers too, but he had no idea of the grade. Berlena's lawyer said that as a bagatelle, has everything else, but taken as a whole, he thought a fair price was obtained for second hand goods, $37.50 being secured for the lot.

The trial is still in progress.

JURORS GET THEIR PAY.

AN EASY CASE TO TACKLE.

Young Sympkle was at a club dinner the other evening, and tried to make an impression on a well-known lawyer who sat next to him. But the man of law did not appreciate the attentions of his neighbor.

"I suppose you gentlemen have some strange cases to deal with at times?" observed Sympkle.

"Yes," answered the lawyer.

"Some very puzzling cases," said the young man, trying again; "cases that almost confuse you and—"

"Yes," said the legal gentleman, a look of determination overspreading his countenance. "I know a man once who had a case to deal with of the kind you mention. He gave his full and undivided attention to that case during the whole of one night, and when he had finished he really did not know which side of the case he was on, he was so confused."

"Really!" exclaimed Sympkle, delighted at having drawn the lawyer at last. "Most interesting! What kind of case was it?"

"It was a case of champagne," replied the other.

He was left in peace after that.—Collier's Weekly.

NEW USE FOR OLD CASTOR.

A woman with a small income and an inventive mind is never quite content, so it should not be thought odd if she carried away in a hearty town. Friends were coming unexpectedly to luncheon, when the housewife remembered there was nothing in the house that would do for a centerpiece. Then she thought of an old silver castor, stored away in the attic. It has six compartments and a handle, all of which were easily removed, and then the castor was cleaned to a state of brilliant shine.

Fresh flowers were brought meadowsweet, ferns and purplish berries, with their green stems. These were arranged in three tiny pots, with moss to cover the earth, and then the old castor was fit for any company.

"How quaint and pretty!" exclaimed one of the guests. "Is it an heirloom?"

"Yes, it is very old. I believe it was used for spices," was the answer, and the guests thought it must date back to the time of queen Anne. When such things were very fashionable.

HIS MISTAKE.

Talkative Old Gentleman Had No Discriminating Taste.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

She was not so very old, but she was intensely respectable, as anyone could see. She was sitting on a park seat reading, and she had a little dog upon her lap. Presently the dog wearied of martion and jumped down to play with a child he had drawn near, as an elderly gentleman sat down beside her.

He was fat and fussy, but talkative, and when he remarked on the weather she paid very little attention, but went on reading.

"Yours, ma'am?" he asked, indicating the object.

"Yes," she said, thinking he meant the dog.

"Pretty little dear," he said.

"Oh, yes," she said, looking up from her paper.

"And the image of you, I can see," he said nearly.

She said nothing until she had snapped up the dog, and then with it in her arms she called off saying:

"Come to Mother, you naughty, horrid, ugly, ill-tempered, unmannered, ungovernable beast."

And he was so thankful that he was unmarried.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

EXCITING RUNAWAY.

Women and Children in Rig—Went Out of Sight.

Pedestrians along East Temple street were startled about 1:30 this afternoon to see a large bay horse hitched to a light spring wagon, occupied by a woman and three little children, dash down the street with break-neck speed. The brave woman had a firm grip on the lines and was vainly endeavoring to get control of the maddened beast. By the time it reached Third South the second lad slipped from his between his teeth and increased its speed. Excited crowds rushed out into the street to watch the course of the runaway. Once the horse tried to turn west but the plucky woman held on to the reins like grim death and kept the animal in the center of the road. How far the outfit ran is a matter of conjecture, but it is certain that the horse would eventually tire of its run and succumb to the will of the woman.

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

Showing of Advantages of Public Ownership.

The question of public ownership of public utilities is fast absorbing attention, says the National Rural, and when untrammeled by partisanship or self-interest the people are rapidly reaching the conclusion that it affords a solution to many problems. In the first instance, it would be one of the most effective means that could be adopted for doing away with much of the prevalent bribing corruption, by removing the most prolific source of temptation.

As long as legislatures have power to grant franchises, they have control of valuable franchises, or have control over corporations holding such franchises with power to extend or curtail their powers, the temptation on the part of corporations seeking such franchises to buy them or extend their privileges by bribing legislators, or the temptation on the part of the irresponsible legislators to sandbag corporations, will exist. Also the temptation on the part of such franchise corporations to control elections in their own interests will be prevalent. The temptation also to corrupt juries and judges to avoid paying heavy damages suits, such as now exists, would be destroyed.

Every thinking person will recognize that these are the most fruitful sources of corruption in our political system, affecting all legislative bodies, from the insignificant town boards to Congress itself.

Secondly, the principal basis underlying the success of monopoly—namely, railway rebates and discriminations, without which but very few monopolies could exist—would be destroyed. Standard Oil and the coal combines undoubtedly owe their existence to discrimination in their favor by the railroads and other transportation lines. The same is true of others.

The argument advanced by Mr. Paul Morton, in his testimony before the industrial commission in favor of pools, is really an argument for public ownership. He said "that a legalized system of pooling contracts put a premium on honesty and make it expensive for the roads to make any of the discriminations or rebates which are now the cause of so much complaint before the commission." He stated also that it would protect small shippers and small towns to an extent which is not possible under the present methods. Undoubtedly this is true. The weakness, however, lies in the fact that the public dare not trust such a formidable power in the hands of a few men, who, experience teaches, would use such a power to benefit the few as against the many. The public is perfectly willing to trust itself, and it is safe only to trust such a formidable power to a people's government responsible directly to the people.

Under public ownership it would be impossible for a few big firms in Chicago to get together every night, as Morton said when the hit between its teeth and increased its speed. Excited crowds rushed out into the street to watch the course of the runaway. Once the horse tried to turn west but the plucky woman held on to the reins like grim death and kept the animal in the center of the road. The White House Cook Book

THE BEST COOK BOOK PRINTED

It more fully represents the progress and perfection of the culinary art than any previous work.

THE "WHITE HOUSE" was compiled by Hugo Ziemann, steward of the White House under President Harrison, and Mrs. F. L. Gillette. It contains over 1,000 Cooking Recipes, besides recipes for toilet and household. Special articles on buying—revisions, dinner giving, table etiquette, carving and care of sick.

A novel and most important department consists of carefully prepared Menus for Breakfast, Luncheon and Dinner, complete for one week in every month of the year.

Buckram. Gilt white enamel cloth binding, illuminated title stamp, large type, wide margins, complete indexes, 414 pages, illustrated.

It was here that he held the famous "spread" to which the chiefs of the warring factions of the Republican Convention sat down, to feast, eat, and from which they arose with amicable natures, differences adjusted, and victory organized.

Mrs. F. L. Gillette is no less prominent and capable, having made a life-long and thorough study of cookery and housekeeping, especially as adapted to the practical wants of average American homes.

The work is embellished with fine portraits of all the ladies of the White House.

The book has been prepared with great care. Every recipe has been tested and found to be valid, upon an side of the flue of Dickens. It is comprehensive, filling completely it is believed, the requirements of housekeepers of all classes. It embodies several original and some notable features, among which may be mentioned the menus for the holidays and for one week in each month in the year, thus covering all varieties of seasonable foods, the arrangement of provisions and management of topics, the simplified method of explanation in preparing materials, in the order of manipulation, thereby enabling the most inexperienced to select from the bill of fare. The subject of carving has been given a prominent place, not only because of its world importance as a social, this art, but particularly because it enables every one at a glance, and in such a departure from the usual mode of treating the subject.

Interesting information is given concerning the fashionable dinner, how to anticipate the guests, and the menus served on special occasions, some of interest.

The binding being of successful cloth it can at any time be readily cleaned and made to look bright and fresh by simply rubbing it with water or soap.
