MRS. SOUTHWELL ACQUITTED.

Jury Finds a Verdict of "Not Guilty" In Ten Minutes.

Special Correspondence.

Provo, Utah Co., May 13.—The Southwell case was closed in the Fourth district court yesterday afternoon by the jury after being out only fifteen minutes, bringing in a verdict of not guilty. The jury arrived at this verdict in ten minutes, there being some delay in bringing in the jury after they had signified their readiness to declare their verdict.

Mrs. Southwell sat with her head bowed, with her handkerchief before her eyes, while the jury was out, and remained in that position till Foreman Clark had declared the verdict of not guilty. Then she raised her head and smiled and was immediately surrounded by her friends who shook hands with her and offered congratulations. Her husband, who has stood manfully by her through the trouble, came up and put his arm on her shoulder, and with their friends they left the courtroom. She did not thank the jury in the courtroom. She afterwards met some of the jurors and expressed her thanks to them personally and sent word to the others. She stated that she did not know whether it was proper for her to speak to the jurors in the courtroom. When the verdict was announced the audience, most of whom had remained in the room, showed their approval by enthusiastically clapping their hands. Judge Booth wrapped vigorously on his desk and reprimanded the violators of decorum, thus stopping the demonstration.

After the "News" report closed Judge Powers finished his argument. He dwelt on the testimony introduced to show temporary insanity and argued that the evidence conclusively showed that Mrs. Southwell's mind was affected at the time the shooting was done. The judge made an eloquent appeal for mercy and charity, although he claimed that the defense did not ask for acquittal on those grounds.

District Attorney Hatch closed for the state with a cool, logical argument on the facts as he claimed they had been shown, and the application of the law to that state of facts.

Judge Booth instructed the jury that they could bring in a verdict of guilty as charged in the information, guilty of assault with intent to do bodily harm, guilty of battery, guilty of assault, or not guilty.

DISTRICT COURT SITTING.

Question of Stenographer's Fees in Probate and Other Cases.

Beaver, Beaver Co., May 12.—District court was opened here at 2 o'clock today, Judge Marioneaux on the bench. A number of probate cases were disposed of.

John T. Kelly vs James McGarry, administrator; case set for May 14.

A matter of some importance to litigants was brought up by Atty. Knox, in relation to stenographers' fees, as provided by chapter 72, section 9, of the session laws of 1899. Mr. Knox objected to the payment of these fees in probate cases, as he understood that in Salt Lake, Provo and Ogden such fees were never taxed by the clerk in probate cases.

The court held in a somewhat lengthy opinion that the stenographer's fee of $3 was a proper charge in probate cases, as well as other cases where a like fee was charged. Mr. Knox wants to get the matter passed upon by the supreme court, and says he will bring a case in the form of a mandamus proceeding against the clerk and carry it to the highest court.

Another question was raised by the clerk in regard to fees as to who should pay the fee of $2.50 provided by the statute for the trial of the cause. The clerk having followed the practice that when the answer is filed this fee should be paid at that time, one of the attorneys practicing here refused to pay the fee at the time of filing the answer, and his action in so refusing brought the matter before the court, who held that the clerk had no right to demand the fee at that time, as it was payable by the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered.

SHROPSHIRE TELLS HIS STORY.

Claims to Have Paid Back Money Received From Actress.

STATES HE WAS GENEROUS.

Lavished Large Income On Her—Easy To Spend Money in Paris—From Luxury to Poverty.

At the resuming of the Barnes-Shropshire suit in the federal court this morning, for the recovery of funds, the room was well filled by lawyers and other interested spectators. The defense opened its side of the case, not, however, until after Atty. Critchlow had read to the jury receipts signed by Mr. Shropshire for certain amounts of money left with him on deposit by Mrs. Barnes. One dated Nov. 6, 1895, was for 3,700 francs; another about the same date was for 1,400 francs, and still another dated May 1, 1896, for 1,850 francs. After introducing these receipts to the jury and presenting a statement of articles pawned by them in Paris and London, the prosecution rested.

Atty. Higgins laid before the jury the side of the defense, in the case. He narrated the story of the meeting of Mr. Shropshire and Mrs. Barnes at Paris in 1895, the former then being United States vice-consul in that city. He told how their relations grew intimate and that in living together they held their property in common. It was stated also that the defense proposed to prove that it was customary for Mr. Shropshire as consul to receive deposits of money for safe keeping, and that he returned every cent to the plaintiff that he had received from her. During this period he spent sums of money on Mrs. Barnes in making her presents aggregating thousands of dollars. His salary, it was affirmed, amounted to about $8,000, and that he expended every cent of it in the interest of Mrs. Barnes. After his connection with the consulate expired, he and Mrs. Barnes went to London, their circumstances became straightened. He pawned his articles along with hers, and they both had to resort to uncongenial labor to support themselves. The attorney further stated that he proposed to show that when Mr. Shropshire went to Birmingham to work, he sent to Mrs. Barnes one-half of every dollar he receive and that he never did intend that she should lose any of her pledged articles. When they came to America he sent her sums of money, not as a debt, but as a gratuitous offering of sympathy and infatuation. The lawyer added that the plaintiff never called on Mr. Shropshire for money in vain so long as he had a cent. He has worked hard to maintain himself and the plaintiff has never permitted him to rest. She has followed him, it was said, with letters, threatening him that if he did not send her money, dire results would ensue, and she has gone to his relatives and tried to intimidate them by threatening to bring suit against Mr. Shropshire.

The first witness called was Atty. D. B. Richards, who was called because of his acquaintance with French law, to give testimony in regard to the French code so far as it related to the conditions in the case in hand. His testimony, however, resolved itself into a school to promote knowledge of French words. Mr. Critchlow sharply cross examined the witness as to the way in which he acquired his knowledge of French law, and a controversy arose between them as to the specific meaning of section 2277 of the French Napoleon code, which related to interest on bonds, loans, etc. Finally the defendant, Mr. Shropshire himself took the code in hand and explained to the court its meaning. He contended that according to the statute of limitations his obligations in relation to the money the plaintiff left with him, had expired, as the rule prescribes 5 years as the length of the life of such obligations. Aside from this contention, said he, we claim that we returned the money. Mr. Critchlow argued that the benefits of that law was only extended to the citizens of France, and after some little discussion as to the limitations of the law the court stated that he would look the matter up and rule upon Mr. Critchlow's objections to the admission of the testimony, before the case goes to the jury.

Mr. Shropshire was next called. He was examined by Judge Rives and in the course of his testimony stated that he first met the plaintiff in Sept., 1895. She called at the consulate for some papers. She was then an actress in the Folie Bergere, and called at the consulate frequently. He invited her out to luncheon and a day or two later she invited him to her apartments. As soon as she began to receive her salary she deposited a portion of it at the consulate. He made one payment in December and tore up the receipt he had given her when he made the payment. Then he tore the paper up and threw the fragmetns on the floor. Those torn pieces were gathered up and pasted together again and are now in evidence in the court. Witness acknowledged that plaintiff deposited other sums of money with him, but he returned them. His income at that time was about $8,000 a year and he stated that he spent all of it on the plaintiff and his friends, adding that it was easy to spend money in Paris. He said further that he paid the expenses of the plaintiff, which were sometimes lavish, so long as he had a franc or a suit of clothes. Witness related that he and plaintiff left Paris in 1896, he paying the expenses. They went to the Victoria hotel in London, but as their resources waned they went from humbler to humbler quarters. They both pawned their articles to sustain themselves, and finally they came to America, he purchasing the tickets. He stated that after arriving in the United States he sent to the plaintiff's mother several sums of money, but he never lived with Mrs. Barnes after leaving England. He lived in New York for several months and during that time he gave the plaintiff money every week, amounting to several hundred dollars.

Witness was asked to approximate the total amount of money he had given the plaintiff since he first met her. The question was objected to and Judge Marshall, in sustaining the objection, stated that what money witness had donated to the plaintiff was utterly irrelevant to the case; that he might be as generous to her as he saw fit, but he must be just.

Mr. Shropshire declared that he never received any money that was realized by the plaintiff in pawning her articles, but that she often was benefited by articles of his own. He further affirmed that in making payments to the plaintiff he did not acknowledge any debt he owed her, but they were merely gifts. He knew she was in debt, and he only had a desire to help her out. The case will probably go to the jury this afternoon, and the breach of promise suit opened tomorrow.
