Orpheum

Vaudeville's cheeriest comedienne, Stella Mayhew, is the notable headliner in the new show starting a seven day engagement at the Orpheum theatre next Sunday. Miss Mayhew is the exemplification of laughter and good nature. Her exclusive song numbers written by Paul Gerard Smith and Billie Taylor, are clever lyrical hits and the manner in which the rotund Stella puts these numbers across the footlights is sure to arouse sales of laughter. She was starred in "Coming Thru the Rye," "High Jinks" and "The Jolly Bachelors," all of them Broadway triumphs.

In a variety of varieties Nat Nazarro introduces at the Orpheum one of the cleverest acts of the year. Music, song, dance and comedy galore are provided by Nazarro and his company, the later including Buck and Bubbles, two phenomenal pickanninies. These two dusky youngsters are natural funmakers and dancers. Chick Yorke and Rose King are giving new life to "The Old Family Tin Type." They are using this as a basis for an eccentric bit of song and chatter. Their act is something new in the field of comedy.

Everyone recalls what a laughing hit "Baby Mine" scored when it appeared on the legitimate stage. Now Miss Nanon Welch and her supporting company have "holled down" this screaming farce into a twenty five minute vaudeville act. Laugh follows laugh without interruption. "Demented Americanos, Habiat North America." That is the billing given a couple of comic comedians by name of Zulu and Drois. In plain English they are nut comedians and offer a skit in which a heated family argument provides the greatest portion of the laughter bound to ensue. Cliff Nazarro and the Darling Sisters present "Juvenile Frivolities." They sing and dance and for good measure introduce a little comedy patter.

Those people who say "mules ain't got no sense at all" will have this theory disproved when they see Fink's Mules at the Orpheum. This equine joy fest is scheduled to close the show with a burst of hilarity. It is an act that provides more fun than a circus.

NEWSPAPER WORLD OPENS FIRE ON H. G. WELLS, PARLOR PINK

America Is Getting Measure of Author of "Mr. Britling Sees It Through"; He and Others Parade as Liberals But are Destructionists; Not Helping to Bring About Future Peace.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—America is getting the measure of H. G. Wells, the best advertised and most destructive correspondent in attendance at the Washington armament conference. The group that surrounds him includes a number of other imported British journalists who are being paid high salaries by American newspapers—most of them, like Wells, parading as "Liberals."

Menace to Peace. It has become increasingly clear as the days have passed since the opening of the conference that perhaps as grave a menace as any other to its success was to be found in the camp of the parlor bolsheviks, fake liberals and earnest self-seekers who have found their way to Washington to write what they think, using the conference as a stage and a background.

A peculiarity of this group of writers and publicists and those who advise them and finance them upon occasion is their universal enmity to the trade union movement.

A review of editorial comment on the work Wells has done since reaching Washington has been made in this city and is interesting as showing the viewpoint of leading American newspapers toward the leader of the pseudo-liberal and parlor-bolshevik group which is centering its attention on the international conference.

Becomes Nationalist. "What disturbs our contemplation of the evangel of universal and abiding peace," says the Chicago Tribune, which was one of the American papers to contract for the Wells articles, "is the instant conversion of Mr. Wells, the philosophical internationalist, into an almost savage English nationalist, with fight in his eyes and anger in his emotions, the moment a Frenchman rapped any of his national susceptibilities."

The Philadelphia Public Ledger, which itself has been far from rigid in drawing the line against the wave of pro-soviet, anti-democratic emotionalism, turns on Wells in a savage cause of the defeated Central Powers and the recalcitrant Russia that betrayed the hard-pressed Allies," says the Public Ledger, "Wells has done more damage to the Anglo-French entente than the bitter Lord Curzon, and has hindered rather than helped the cause of the conference.

"Wells has proved the British buff in the china shop," the editorial further declares. "He is a potent parlor bolshevik. Because Russia is Communist and Red, Wells, who is a sort of soda-and-sarsaparilla, Communist and a Pinky-Red, is the apostle for and defender of Russia."

Driven to Defend Him. The New York World, which has boasted through endless columns of gush about its contract with Wells, is driven to defend him as it would defend Ludendorff and von Terptitz. "If," says the World editorial, "any considerable number of Englishmen feel as Mr. Wells does about French militarism, it is well to have that fact known;" which is to say that Mr. Wells has a value only if he typifies and reveals some considerable point of view in England. Elsewhere in the editorial it is rather humbly set forth that "the World, as its readers know, does not accept all of Mr. Wells' opinions."

The New York Evening Post editorially says that, equipped as he was, "it was assumed" that Wells' writings "would naturally be a synthesis of basic criticism and sympathetic illumination." The Post finds, however, that "instead, he proceeded to get mad . . . Like an Old Man of the Tribe . . . at the French."

Would Delay Progress. It has been interesting to note the synchronization of the Wells and Hearst attacks on the conference. The Hearst publications, through Brisbane, who made a great reputation as an opponent of special interests and a pleader of the cause of the common people, has turned upon the international conference in the "most bitter manner."

The criticisms and denunciations by Wells and Hearst and by the lesser lights of this strange mixture of based upon the fear that the conference would do nothing, but upon the probability that it would do something which is more universally longed for today than any other object has been longed for at any other period in world history.

That is why constructive opinion in Washington so keenly the undermining and destructive work of Wells and Hearst and the motley band of which they are the leading figures.
