COTTON DECLINES ON LATE SELLING

Early Gains Lost When Western and Spot Interests Become Active.

Although the early action of yesterday's cotton market reflected greater optimism about the labor situation, its late dealings plainly showed that bull enthusiasms had not reappeared. During the forenoon the market was steady in undertone and advanced 25 to 30 points in the absence of heavy liquidation or new bear pressure, but all of that gain was lost when Western and spot interests turned active sellers late in the day. The result of that pressure was a decline to new lows for the move and losses of 23 to 48 points. The finish was at the low.

Liverpool futures furnished the local trade with an interesting topic for analysis. After opening at 56 to 59 penny-points lower, or more than 30 points less than expected, the English market gradually advanced. The final cable from abroad quoted Liverpool's finish as "strong." The idea of many local traders that the liquidation in Liverpool by Continental interests had been completed caused the almost sensational rally equal to 130 of our points.

Despite the fact that the futures markets are steadily on the decline, very little actual cotton is being pressed for sale in the South. Although marketing such cotton was rapid during the first part of the season and sales from first hands and merchants were large, offerings of cotton in the last fortnight were very moderate.

The late tone of yesterday's market was generally unsettled. Although sentiment here seems mixed, and many expect a good rally, outside feeling, especially in the Western grain crowd, is bearish. It was rumored that heavy buying orders, amounting to more than 20,000 bales, would be centred on December, should that option fall to 18 cents flat. It dropped to 18.05c. just before yesterday's close.

The local spot market was 25 points lower at 18.50 cents a pound. In New Orleans the price of middling was quoted 25 points lower at 18.25 cents. Liverpool middling was off 92 English points to 11.87d.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market for cottonseed oil was lower, closing net unchanged to 37 points under the final of Monday. There was active liquidation at times, owing to the weakness in grain and lard, but shorts were active buyers on the breaks, which had a tendency to check the downward movement and brought about a partial late rally. The United States Census Bureau report on cottonseed oil showed a disappearance of about 274,000 barrels in September, which was considered by the trade as a very good showing. The day's sales were 23,700 barrels.

The range of prices in the cottonseed oil futures market was as follows:
