THE OLD PASSES ON:

THE NEW YEAR ARRIVES

Like the folding up and the laying away of a letter that has been impressively read and memorized the Old Year will be wrapped in memories both painful and pleasant, and pushed back into the drawer of Time, along with other years that have gone on before.

Time, bewildering in its intricacies, touches us with the fondness of the mother toying with the cooing babe upon her breast. Soothing, it silences poignant pressing griefs with softest touch, and gives joyous rest to those tired of the turmoil and tumult of the unusual and the unexpected.

The year is not dying. It is merely taking its gladsome hours, its graver moods, into a niche alongside the stairway of Life—and though we do not again mount that one step we ever remember when we rested upon it. Fancy we shall often hark where the twelve-months left behind the silken scroll, and study that which is there written.

The Old Year has played with us the game sometimes drives us with force here and there—forcing even the strongest to move before it—or fall to be forgotten. It has scored, sometimes, with the severity of the cutting lash; it has seared, sometimes, as with the thermal fury of the white-hot iron; then it has relented, and only an occasional fitful gust comes to remind us of the past.

Tonight the Old Year drops from us—but not from memory. Silently it watches to see the New Year born, remains to bestow a blessing on the babe, then, like the candle nearly spent, the wick drops and the glow is lost.

Yet all along through the New Year yet to be there will rest in each memory thoughts that awaken mirth and mournfulness, pains and pleasures, never to be effaced.

What of the New Year about to dawn? Will it bring the multiplicity of events which marred its predecessor? It cannot bring the same heart-pains; but it may contribute new hardships to mingle with its joys and happiness. But that it may be free from all that disturbs the mind and racks the heart all will hope and wish.

The Old Year will swing in the hammock of the Past—just out of reach. The New Year will rest in the cradle of the Now, within a hand's-touch. The reached-out fingers may grasp the tiny Ribbons of Hope fluttering from its garments; the Genii of Fate may be appeased at the act; and all may be well. It is to be wished so. It is to be hoped that 1923 may bring more and take less than its elder brother; may give more of the sweets of Life and less of the acids; may give delight to the despondent; and may brighten every pathway as the journey continues.
