BLUE ENVELOPE.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 8.—Several hundred guests from this and adjoining States sat down to the Jackson Dinner here tonight, and the Democratic symposium of 1900 was formally launched with speeches by William J. Bryan, Congressman Carmack of Tennessee, Lieut. Governor of Kansas and other leaders of Democracy.

It was generally conceded that the addresses on that subject would sound the alarm for the battle with trusts, imperialism and the good prosperity of the country, and each succeeding toast was drunk upon these issues with enthusiasm and could not be mistaken.

During the afternoon and early evening the leading Democrats of Nebraska, Kansas and Iowa thought alike in the hotel lobbies, and politics was leading in all the conversations of the day.

Club Reception.

At the Jackson Club land parlors in the afternoon was held a reception for the visitors, while dinner was given at the Omaha Club and served to the prominent speakers.

At about the hour in Illinois Congressman Mahon was the guest of honor at the Jackson Club dinner in Peoria, and over the spacious ballroom and dining-rooms and parlors were occupied by the guests.

It was after 8 o'clock when Congressman Mahon was called to the first toast, "Illinois," which he responded to in a speech of 15 minutes, in which he said:

"Illinois is a Democratic State. At the last election, in 1896, we polled 465,000 votes, and the vote cast for Congressman Carmack and myself, and for Governor W. J. Bryan, was 465,000 and some odd votes.

"The list of toasts and speakers was as follows: "Illinois," Congressman Mahon; "Our Country," Congressman Carmack; "Our Jackson," Governor Stephens; "Our Party," Governor Holcomb; "Our Nation," A. J. Weston; "Expansion," Congressman Lewis; "Our Jackson," Congressman Bryan; "The Judiciary," Judge Scott; "The Press," Mr. Allgeier; "The Ladies," Miss Cronin; "Our Jackson," W. J. Bryan; Lincoln.

Governor Holcomb was unable to be present.

Although notwithstanding disorder was effected by some which at Illinois, it was generally conceded that Congressman W. J. Bryan then was in fine harmony of the evening of each the entire list of the speeches.

Hitchcock Presents Bryan.

Congressman Hitchcock, in presenting Mr. Bryan, said:

"I propose now the last toast of the evening, the best and the greatest, your Nation. Nebraska is the state which has given to history its most illustrious son, Abraham Lincoln, and the greatest of living Democrats.

"A year ago I might have rested, but twice since then Nebraska Democrats have so pronounced their choice and so charged with danger that we dare not pray the God of Nations to give the American people to Nebraska's hand to rend the false and pilfering empires of shoddy and spoils, abandoned and accursed imperialism at home.

"The glamour of victory and the lure for loaves and fishes have led the unthinking thousands to hail beside the banners of the world lord, for the mad victory of imperialism, and register for the conquest of the world have no attention for the humble. The man, the worker, the farmer, the mechanic, the social people, the laborer, the producer, are neglected in the rush to the spoils. Our Democracy is the party of the people, and the people are neglected in the rush to the spoils. We are the party of the people, and the people are neglected in the rush to the spoils. We are the party of the people, and the people are neglected in the rush to the spoils. We are
