THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.

Jesus and Nicodemus. (John iii. 1—18.

Prepared by J. C. Grieve, D. D., Superintendent of the Assembly Training School, Dansville.

CONNECTION. It is impossible to determine how long a time elapsed between the events of the last lesson and the time of the present lesson. We are indebted to John for any mention of what happened in the meantime and his accounts may not be complete. His brief sketch, however, furnishes an interpretation (Verses 22-36) of the first disciples. Jesus passed with them to Cana of Galilee, evidently in consultation with the Baptist. At a meeting he witnessed his first miracle, making wine out of water. Thence he made a very hasty trip to Capernaum, which was not in the issue. This new month despised. After this he went up to Jerusalem to attend the passover, his first after his baptism, and drove the traders out of the temple. This brave act, together with his general bearing and speech, attracted the attention of all, and his fame quickly spread among all classes through the city.

INQUIRY (Verses 1 and 2). These were the days of Christ's popularity. He had not arrayed the governing classes against him, on the contrary many in high places were disposed to regard Him with marked respect, yes, a ruler of the Jews, that is, a member of the Sanhedrin, Nicodemus, sought Jesus in a private interview, letting the night season is affording good favorable conditions. (John xix. 39.) His approach was eminently respectful, free from any evidence of jealousy. He addressed Jesus as "rabbi," the most appropriate title at that time, when the real nature of our Lord was understood by none, and openly acknowledged the exalted mission of Christ as coming from God, evidenced by his wonderful deeds. This remark was equivalent to a request for instruction, an inquiry after the art of Teacher's doctrine. Nicodemus assumed the attitude of a learner.

WONDER (Verses 3 and 4). Jesus immediately opened to his illustrious visitor the great central truth of the Christian religion, declaring that it was impossible for any man to see the kingdom of God unless he was born again, or born from above. This was intended to correct the misunderstanding of the Jews, who thought of the kingdom as outward and temporal, whereas it was in reality spiritual. (John xviii. 36.) Until this view was obtained Nicodemus could not make no progress in the school of Christ. (Matt. xi. 12.) The bold manifestation startled the ruler. He took up his 8th been taught that the seed of Abraham were all Jews and the resurrection of David's kingdom was the end to be sought. Besides, the words of Jesus were outspoken and he was filled with wonder at the thought that a man might experience a second physical birth. How was this possible?

EXPLANATION (Verses 5 and 6). Condescending to the state of the ruler's mind Jesus explained his words. A man must be born of water and of the spirit. By water is meant baptism, by the spirit is meant the renewal of the heart by the power of the Holy Ghost. (Titus iii. 5.) It is clear from this that baptism alone does not regenerate, but that Christ received it in his system (Mark xvi. 16), as did also the apostles. (Acts ii. 38.) Here we have the mode of entering into the kingdom. God works in the heart, and the universe enters into the church. But grace in the water placed before the spirit? Many reverse this order. An answer to the question would occupy much space. It will be wise for every student to look up for himself the one subject. Having thus set forth the nature of the new birth, Jesus further replies to the question of Nicodemus by saying that any number of things in the flesh would effect no change. The birth of the spirit produces spirituality.

MYSTERY (Verses 7 and 8). It was a most elevated theme which Jesus had thus presented to the new disciple, who which he could hardly expect to understand, a theme which has puzzled the best minds from that day to this. In a very kindly way, therefore, he endeavored to relieve the evident embarrassment of Nicodemus by urging him not to marvel at the strangeness of such. While the new birth was full of mystery, yet the most common occurrences in life are. The wind, with which all were familiar, came and went, and no one knew its origin or destination. It could not even be seen. There was merely the sound and the interposition or effect. Men talked about the movements of the atmosphere without receiving wholly ignorant concerning it. Why, then, should they marvel because of the announcement of a spiritual force operating upon the spirits of men? The latter is as much a cause for wonder as the former. (Eccl. xi. 5.)

AUTHORITY (Verses 9-16). Nicodemus The mind of Nicodemus had not come to rest. He had not yet accepted the intuitive truth, and nothing could be done until he did. "How can these things be?" was his question, expressing the mingled wonder and doubt. The new-born spirit of Jesus shifted the line of thought from the rational to the authoritative basis. First, he marked how a man could come into a place of power in Israel without knowing these things. Judaism was not a mere matter of ceremony, but of the heart (Deuteronomy x. 16), and Jesus only sought to realize in the people what had been lacking through all the centuries (Deut. v. 29) as every well-instructed Jew ought to have known, received. If Nicodemus was not said, Jesus was not. He had come from heaven, as the former confessed, and had stated what he knew to be true, what he was well-nigh ready to say concerning the kingdom of heaven. Moreover, no other was qualified. He, therefore, appealed to the ruler that if he was strange this testimony, could not, as it had been, should be received.

SYMBOL (Verses 14 and 15). Nicodemus was silent, as well he might be in such an awkward predicament. He had sought the attention of a famous teacher, whose character and ability he had confessed, but he had displayed his ignorance by giving a carnal interpretation to that which was spiritual. He had failed to apprehend what an intelligent Jew ought to know, and declined to receive the words of one who did know. Jesus advanced to show how the spiritual birth might be secured. It was to be by faith in the uplifted or crucified son of man. (Acts xvi. 31.) This early in his career did Jesus refer to his death and to the atonement to be made thereby, and to the method by which that atonement was to be made available for man's spiritual good. (Rom. v. 8.) To make all this intelligible to his pupil, he employed an Old Testament symbol familiar to every Jew. The serpent in the wilderness raised on a pole by Moses was the emblem of Christ elevated on the cross.

DOCTRINE (Verses 16, 17, 18). Lest we in this way step to step, Nicodemus must listened to the sublimest and profoundest words that ever fell upon the ears of mortals. Jesus declared to him several great doctrines whose exposition would consume more space than can be here allowed. First, God loved the world, Gentiles as well as Jews, a startling assertion to a Jewish ruler; second, that love of God for the race of man prompted the gift of his son, who came not, as the Jews had supposed he would, to restore their political power and break their bondage to Rome; third, all men everywhere, Gentiles, as well as Jews, who believed in this son, the only begotten, should have everlasting life, life here and life beyond the grave; fourth, the mission of the son to the earth was not as a judge, but a Savior; fifth, while all this looks to the future life for its consummation, it has respect, at the same time, to the present life. Belief now frees from condemnation.

REFLECTIONS—Why is it that men will not begin at the right place in the study of the Christian religion? They ask questions innumerable upon many secondary matters, forgetting that until they have experienced the new birth they are in no condition to understand anything. The great men of the world are asking "How?" If they would but believe in Jesus and receive by the Holy Ghost the new nature there would come clearer vision. (1 Cor. xi. 14.) Then many of their questions would be answered, while others of them would be dismissed as unimportant. Then, also, they would easily advance from truth to truth, from grace to grace, in a way that would be increasingly delightful. Enter by the door into the kingdom (John, x, 9), and the mind and heart shall be at rest. If Jesus is worthy of our faith, let us accept him and bear him (Matt., xiii, 5).

FELL FROM A STREET CAR.

Mrs. Rebecca Gill Was Badly Injured.

Mrs. Rebecca Gill of No. 1207 North Spring avenue was painfully bruised while attempting to board an eastbound Page avenue car at Academy avenue Thursday night. According to the police report, she boarded the car and attempted to get on, but was thrown off as the car started south. Before she had mounted to the top of the platform she fell and was thrown to the ground. She was taken to the Second District station and then to her home. The car was No. 2017 of the Union Traction Company, in charge of Conductor James M. Sax and motorman A. Wall.

A few minutes later another car came along, going west on Page avenue, and C. H. Hornsby, the motorman, helped the car to aid the injured woman. They took her to her home and then they took her to a drug store. They placed her on a cot and carried her into the drug shop of the proprietor, Gerner, where Doctor Dreyer of No. 1[illegible] Page avenue was called to attend her. He found a bruised wound in the back of her head, but her skull was not fractured. It is thought also that she is injured internally, but Doctor Dreyer said that would not be determined for several days.

Mrs. Gill was placed on an southbound car and taken to her home about an hour after the accident occurred. Doctor Dreyer, who attended her, said her injuries were not very serious.

"I feel as if somebody had died that day one had fallen from my car until I got back on my return trip. Had I known that Mrs. Gill had fallen I would most certainly have stopped the car and given each passenger as I could. At the point where the accident occurred a lady and gentleman boarded the car and came home. I did not see any one else getting up and have the motorman ring the bell to stop the car."
