De Lerue, 251 William street, New York.

AN UNFAITHFUL SECRETARY.

James H. Graham Charged With Stealing Congressman Glover's Private Papers. James H. Graham was called for trial in the Criminal Court to-day on the charge of house-breaking. Graham was a confidential secretary in the employ of Congressman John H. Glover, and is charged by Glover with having stolen the papers in the case of the late Anastasia Patten vs. Col. R. I. Fleming. Graham is represented by E. B. Hay as counsel.

Mr. Graham claims that this is purely a piece of spite work on the part of Mr. Glover, growing out of differences which will appear at the trial. When the case was called this morning Mr. Lipscomb stated that the Government was unable to go to trial, as an important witness for the prosecution was absent in St. Louis. Mr. Hay protested against any further delay, calling attention to the fact that he had for some time been trying to secure a trial of the case.

Mr. Graham then rose to his feet, saying that he was a member of the bar and would like to say a few words. He spoke with the utmost earnestness. "Through some mistake," said he, "this case has been set, my witnesses, eight or ten in number, been called away from their places of business. It is unfair to them and to the defendant that this case should be further continued. The indictment was found two months ago. This witness was then in the city of Washington. Why could they not have then issued subpoenas?"

"I state further to the court, that as God is my judge, I was never near that house after the 8th of September, and this indictment charges the bill. I have a reputation and a character which this complaint with all its money, or his wife's money, cannot smirch. Why should this case hang over me? Why should this cloud hang over me, my wife and children? This malice and spite that has enveloped that little corpse that sits there—"

Here he was interrupted by the Court with the admonition that different language must be chosen, and he seated himself without finishing the sentence. The case was finally set for next Thursday.

THE "CRAB MAN" ASSAULTED.

The Old Familiar Vender Badly Damaged by a Rough. "Crab man! Crab man!" Crab man's cry of "erwary."

Charles Bolden, the old crab man, was crying his wares in the tenebrous wall that every one who is much about town at night has heard on C street, between Thirteenth and Thirteen-and-a-half streets, Wednesday night, when a big negro, named William Cole, stepped him and demanded a crab.

"Crab Charlie," as he is known, said that he didn't give his crabs away, except in return for five cents in the nickel coin of the realm. Charlie is a good-natured old negro and was totally unaware of the sinister designs of his tall customer. With an oath Cole made a pass at the crab man and cut him clear through the middle.

Charlie came into the Police Court yesterday with his head lashed up in bloody bandages and his legs all about in a state of extreme agony. He was charged with cutting people, was fined $25. Cole was caught by Officer Heller. Cole said that he bought a devil crab of the old man and the old man wouldn't give it to him.

He said he grabbed one of "de devilish" crabs and struck Bolden with its sharp claws which made him cut. Bolden said he was cut with a knife, and Cole went down. Suddenly the hammers ceased and the men listened intently to the approaching clatter of a horse's hoofs.

It's a race, by my word, said one. "He's spitting the wind, too," said another. "That little filly knows how to pick up her feet and she don't study about it, neither," said number three. "Dang my buttons!"

This was said just as the rider appeared in sight, presiding in a picture of robust manhood, guiding with unerring hand the fleetest little mare in Western Georgia. He was clad in a fine broad-cloth suit, a pair of the best calf-skin boots, and they armed and ornamented with neat, small spurs.

He came. The men were lost in admiration and stood with mouth and eyes open, trails fixed to the spot. He neared the bridge. As they meant the crowd were awakened to the horrible death that awaited the man should he attempt to pass over the bridge.

"Stop! stop!" shouted the men. "The floor's up!" "You can't cross!" "The horse's hoofs struck the bridge." "He'll be killed!" "Stop his horse!"

And they all rushed to the middle of the track. "Clear the track!" whooped the impatient rider, and the way was cleared. He reached the brink. The gallant mare paused—trembled. The men stood breathless. The rider planted himself firmly in the saddle, gathered the reins tighter, and sank the spurs deep into the sides of his mare.

She quitted, leaped wildly into the air and landed stately beyond the awful gap. With unslackened pace, and without a sound save the clattering of the horse's hoofs, both steed and rider disappeared over the hill, leaving surpassing anything of the kind in the history of Georgia—Hamilton (Ga.) Journal.

Convicted Six Times. Samuel Emery, a colored man with a face that reminded the beholder of the lamented Crowley, was convicted six successive times in the Criminal Court yesterday of as many different charges of housebreaking. He was convicted before a jury on three charges and pleaded guilty to three. He had entered the residence of Thos. J. Anderson, John J. Ryan, Thos. G. Tilton, Alvin Rose and Joseph Kilms.

HOW ZOLA WORKS.

How the French Novelist Lives and Writes His Remarkable Books. Zola in private life must not be judged by novels. He has always led an exemplary existence and his tastes are of the most bourgeois kind. Married in early life to a young girl in humble station, Zola has always been a home body. Outside of a very few friends he has never received any company, and in the way of visits he has limited his calls to a very few friends, such as Daudet, Goncourt and Charpentier.

The novelist's Paris apartments are in the Rue Balbu, but he spends only two or three months here, when he is superintending the rehearsal of a piece or making researches at the library. The rest of the year he lives at Medan, a little village overlooking the Seine, not far beyond the forest of Saint-Germain, where he is one of the municipal councilors. His study at Medan is an immense room, hung in tapestries, at one end of which is an immense divan, covered with silk cushions and Oriental stuffs. A window, occupying nearly the side of the room, gives light screened through glass panes painted in rich tones and representing flowers and peacocks in all sorts of attitudes.

In preparing his novel "Le Terre" he went into the Breton country, hired a hut, a horse and carriage and traveled about from farm to farm, talking with all his material he makes a general plan of his book, then another plan dividing the work into its various parts, and for each of these parts he classifies the notes he has collected. He begins to write the novel he continually stops to make notes suggested by the work as it advances, and these daily notes are added to those already classified for the future chapters.

Zola is very methodical about his work; he has a regular task that he performs each day. Up at five in the morning, he takes a short walk with his dogs before eating his breakfast. At 9 he sits down to work and writes until 11, when the daily task is finished. After the noon meal he takes a nap, and at 2 o'clock he is awake and ready for his mail which arrives at that hour. After dinner and a chat or a game of billiards with his friends, if any have come out to see him, he retires to his study and reads late into the night before retiring. As soon as one novel is finished he generally takes a few weeks' rest before beginning another book, and during this time he gives himself up to the pleasures of rural life, gardening, boating, etc.

A LEAP FOR LIFE.

How a Georgia Horseman Crossed Mulberry Creek. It was in the sixties, Mitchell's bridge across Mulberry Creek was the tallest in Harris County. A swell in the creek had washed away the bridge twelve months had assembled to repair the damage. The flooring for twelve feet had been removed. It was twenty-five feet to the water beneath.

Suddenly the hammers ceased and the men listened intently to the approaching clatter of a horse's hoofs. It's a race, by my word, said one. "He's spitting the wind, too," said another. "That little filly knows how to pick up her feet and she don't study about it, neither," said number three. "Dang my buttons!"

This was said just as the rider appeared in sight, presiding in a picture of robust manhood, guiding with unerring hand the fleetest little mare in Western Georgia. He was clad in a fine broad-cloth suit, a pair of the best calf-skin boots, and they armed and ornamented with neat, small spurs.

He came. The men were lost in admiration and stood with mouth and eyes open, trails fixed to the spot. He neared the bridge. As they meant the crowd were awakened to the horrible death that awaited the man should he attempt to pass over the bridge.

"Stop! stop!" shouted the men. "The floor's up!" "You can't cross!" "The horse's hoofs struck the bridge." "He'll be killed!" "Stop his horse!"

And they all rushed to the middle of the track. "Clear the track!" whooped the impatient rider, and the way was cleared. He reached the brink. The gallant mare paused—trembled. R. OF L. TO TURN OUT.

District Assembly, No. 66, to Escort Its Delegation to the Railway Station. Mr. R. L. Jordan, the delegate of District Assembly, No. 66, K. of L., will leave for the West to-night to attend the Knights of Labor Convention. The occasion will be made a notable one by the assembly. Mr. Jordan has been conspicuous in his efforts in behalf of the plate-printers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing during the past year, having the satisfaction of seeing his work brought to a successful end. It has been the wish of his associates to compliment him in some fitting way. Consequently he will be escorted to the railway station to-night by the members of District Assembly No. 66, headed by the Marine Band. They will meet at the Light Infantry Armory at 6 o'clock and proceed to the station, after a short parade. The representative of District Assembly, No. 64, of New York, has come on here, and will accompany Mr. Jordan to the West.

Arthur Wells' Story. In the Police Court this morning the case of Arthur Wells, the 14-year old negro boy who so nearly blew John Graham's, or John Murray's, head off at Child's brickyard, was continued. The youthful gunner was arrested last night and locked up in the Navy-Yard station-house. He says that Graham, or Murray, was the aggressor and tried to take from him a wheelbarrow which was using. He refused to give it up and the man knocked him down and kicked him. Then he went home and got the shotgun and shot him.
