JUDGE STEADMAN'S SUDDEN REVERSAL.

He Developed a Sudden Liking for the Mud, and Won in a Common Canter.

HIS PREVIOUS RACES BAD.

Maddox and Chamberlain, Owners of Steadman, Have Been Suspended Pending an Investigation.

Judge Steadman suddenly developed a liking for a muddy track at the Fair Grounds yesterday and galloped home an easy winner in the first race, after being backed in the betting from 8 to 5 to 1. Such a startling reversal of form has not occurred at the Fair Grounds in years.

Steadman has long been regarded as anything but a mud lark. "Twas said by the wiseacres that nothing but a surface as hard as a graduated pavement would suit him. It was taken for granted that this was right, as all of his outings on a soft or heavy track have resulted disastrously to his backers. He invariably brought up the rear when started on this sort of a track.

Yesterday the track was hock deep in mire. It could not be made worse for Steadman—that is, judging from his past performances. The price was long. The money that can regulate the Judge's speed went into the bookmakers' boxes. Instead of being easy money, as the bookies, who were acquainted with Steadman's dislike for the mud, supposed, it was merely a loan, and the interest that the backers of the chalk were compelled to pay put an awful crimp in their bankrolls.

Instead of handicapping him, the mud seemed to increase the Judge's speed, for it has been a long time since he went about at the clip he did yesterday. For a half mile he chased Takim, the favorite, for the race. Then Talley gave him his head and he shot to the front, and when the stretch was reached he was ten lengths to the good. The smart youth did not like to show up his mount, and he took all kinds of raps on him when he was straightened out for home. Steadman, however, was full of run. It would have taken a brick wall to slow his speed. At the finish there were six lengths of daylight between the first and second horses, and Steadman's head was pulled sideways.

Yesterday's performance was a vast improvement over his last race, which was on a fast track, and this is the kind that suits him best. On Monday last Judge Steadman started in the first race, which was a mile and seventy yards. That the track was lightning fast was shown by The Light's six and a half furlongs in 1:21. Although he was off first on this occasion, he finished sixth in a field of seven. Such horses as Iron Chancellor and Addie Levy had no trouble beating him. The latter beat him three lengths. She was comfortable in a race with the Judge yesterday, but finished twenty lengths behind him. However, he will not be given a chance to pull off another of his acrobatic performances at the Fair Grounds. Immediately after the race Judge Murphy issued a notice, stating that Judge Steadman's entry will be refused in the future. He issued another later in the day, to the effect that Maddox and Chamberlain, the owners of Judge Steadman, had been suspended pending an investigation.

Aside from Judge Steadman's sudden feat, the followers of the ogre had plenty to talk about. Will Fay, against whose chances as good as 30 to 1 was laid, won the third race, and George W. Jenkins copped the final event of the day at 10 to 1. Taken all in all, it was an exceedingly disastrous day for the bookers, and a good one for those in on the know.

Kindred had no trouble landing the second race. As good as even money could have been had against his chances. With any sort of a decent ride, Aunt Maggie might have been dangerous.

El Caballo chose a slight favorite over Duty for the third race. Will Fay, the long shot, took the track at the outset and held it to the end. He was tiring badly in the last strides and would have been beaten in a few more jumps. Doncaster was a good thing in the race, but she turned out to be the rankest sort of a bloomer.

The handicap, the fourth race on the card, was an excellent betting proposition. Object, Dave Waldo, Governor Holmes and Hi-Noc-Kor all had supporters. After much guessing, the talent finally landed on Object as the right one. He rewarded his backers by winning handily from Dave Waldo. The latter made all the running, but tired badly at the end.

Banish had things all his own way in the fifth race. Off second, he rushed to the front at the quarter and was never headed. Maydine ran a very bad race in this event. She never displayed any of her usual speed at any part of the route, and at the finish she was away back in the ruck.

George W. Jenkins was overlooked in the last event. Last Saturday he was heavily backed to win the William J. Lemp Stake from such youngsters as Queen Dixon, Ampere and Sard. Although at the time he appeared to be outclassed, he was right on top of his horses in the final stride. This was at six furlongs, though, and it was thought that the race yesterday was not far enough for him, as it was only five-eighths. The going stopped the other contenders, and the big stretch-running son of Imp, Rebor came like a wild horse at the end and beat Robert, Jr., a half length for the long end of the parade. Lena's Darling, the favorite, made all the running and fell into the stretch by five lengths, but quit to nothing when the pinch came.

OHNET COST ARTHUR ONLY $40.

He Was Purchased at Jakie Markhen's Sale Last Year.

F. M. Arthur annexed two purses at the Fair Grounds yesterday with Ohnet and Banish. Both were favorites. Arthur purchased Ohnet at Jake Markhen's sale last year for $40. It was indeed a lucky purchase, for the 3-year-old son of imp. Conrad has already won himself out a dozen times over and promises to develop into a colt of excellent quality. In the handicap yesterday he beat some of the best sprinters at the track.

Fourteen books drew on at the Fair Grounds yesterday. It was the largest number that has been on since the first month of the meeting.

"Kid" Rogers and Tommy Connors arrived at the track yesterday from Chicago, where they had been booking for the Cella-Adler-Tillos syndicate. Connors says the game around Chicago was never so good.

Several bets were made on Will Fay, the winner of the second race, at odds as good as 100 to 1. "Kid" Rogers laid this price for a second. The sharpshooters got to him in a hurry and he lost heavily to the race.

After the last race Judge Murphy called for the sheets on the Judge Steadman race. He intends to make a thorough investigation into the running of this inconsistent performer.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Boston, Mass., July 25.—Two kinds of thunder and lightning appeared on the South End grounds this afternoon. The first came from the heavens and caused 2,000 people to run for shelter. The second came from the Boston club, and it struck St. Louis full and fair. Incidentally the score was 17 to 2, although when the game ended it was actually 18 to 5, but people got tired of counting runs after the first inning was half over. As the sixth inning was not finished when darkness compelled Umpire Hurst to call the game, the score had to revert to the fifth inning. This robbed McGraw of a home run, Burkett of a three-bagger and Clements of Boston a home run. But it made little difference. The black clouds merely put an end to a very tiresome exhibition.

Manager Tebeau had three twirlers available, Powell, Hughey and Weyhing. As Powell's wrist has been rather sore for a day or two it was decided to save him for the Brooklyn game to-morrow, and Hughey was elected to occupy the slab. Hughey has pitched some good games against Boston, but as a rule the locals hit him hard, and the way they bumped him this afternoon was really something cruel. The hits were going to all corners of the lot, and it looked as though Boston was never going to let up. After Hughey had received a substantial dose from the first seven men who faced him, Weyhing was sent out, and for the remainder of the inning it appeared that two pitchers might be knocked out of the box. But Weyhing finished the inning after a while and stayed in the remainder of the ill-fated contest.

In that single inning Boston made ten hits, with a total of sixteen bases, including two three-baggers by Freeman, both of which were clean, and doubles by Long and Stahl. Boston's heavy hitting streak was materially aided by some rank fielding on St. Louis's part. Hughey, McGraw, Wallace and Robinson all committing offenses in this line. Thirteen runs were made before the inning was over, and more might have been made had not Selee wanted to hurry the game up before the clouds burst. It was one of the most peculiar exhibitions ever seen here. St. Louis had started out nicely on its own account, McGraw getting a pretty double and scoring on a single by Burkett. The second was uneventful.

In the third, with one man out and one on base, the storm burst in full fury and there was a letup for twenty minutes. When the teams again took the field the bases were filled for St. Louis, but Nichols pulled himself together and retired the side. When Boston came to bat there were more hits and more errors of judgment by the visiting players. The result was that the total runs was swelled to sixteen. It looked like a free exhibition game until the last of the fourth, when Long tapped out a three-bagger and scored on a fly to the outfield.

In the fifth McGraw led off with a base on balls. Burkett singled and McGraw went to second. Kelster flied out to Freeman and Donovan forced Burkett at second. Wallace drew a free pass and the bases were full. Hamilton muffed McGann's fly and McGraw and Donovan both scored with what proved to be St. Louis's final runs.

Boston's half of the fifth was passed without incident, and then came the sixth, when St. Louis took another batting spurt, which counted for nothing. Had it not been for the easy pitching of Hughey, Boston might have won so easily, if it won at all.

Nichols was off the best of form, and was hit hard enough to win in an ordinary game, but luck was again against his efforts. Something has gone wrong with them in each of the three games played here on this series. The batting was the feature of the contest; that of Burkett and Freeman being especially heavy, while McGraw, Kelster, Long and Stahl all did fine work with the stick.

The fielding features were all contributed by Bo
